DEATH TAKES ANOTHER PIONEER

IN DEMISE OF MRS. JANE BOWDISH, FRIDAY

Settled in Charlevoix County in 1869, Locating On Farm in Norwood Tnwnship.

In the death of Mrs. Jane Bowdish last Friday morning, Charlevoix lost another of its good citizens and pioneer settlars. She had heen suffering with heart tronhle for many months and at three a. m. passed away, leaving many who will mourn her loss sincerely.

Jane Lightle was born October 31, 1842, in Howie township, conty Bruce, Ontario, of Scottish parentage. She was married in 1859 to Joseph Gray, of Bruce county, and moved to the United States just at the outhreak of the Civil war. Mr. Gray went south with the Union forces as a hostler to the staff of one of tha regiments, his wife accompanying him. In 1869 they came to Charlevoix and took up railroad lands in Norwood township, near what is now the Porter farm, remaining there until Mr. Gray's death in 1883. There were six children by thle marriage, but all died in infancy. The widow married Albert Bowdish in 1885. They moved to Charlevoix, where Mr. Bowdish died May 10, 1902, without issue. The only relatives now remaining are two nieces, who reside in Canada.

The funeral services were heid at the M. E. church Saturday afternoon, Rev. Quinton Walker officiating. The body was taken to Brookside cemetery for interment.

Although in very poor health herself for many years Mrs. Bowdish always found time and strength to lighten the burden of sicknass and suffering for others by her kindly care and ministrations, wbich endeared her to many. She always had a friendly word and a smile for everyone and har cheerfulness in the face of her own physical distress and enforced loneliness presented an example of Christian fortitude all too rare a manifestation in our modern high tension life, with its unreasoning impatience, discontent and magnification of trifles.

A FUNCTION LONG TO BE REMEMBERED

Informal Receptinn Given Charlevnix Teachers a Great Success.

Friday night last witnessed a most enjoyable social function at the Charlevoix public library. The informal teachers reception given by the school board and brought to a successful issua by a most efficient group of Charlevoix ladies, was a function long to be remembered.

While ontside the rain came down in torrents, within all was mirth and friendship, and amid the artistic decorations of sweet peas and goldeu rods, old friendship was made stronger and new ones were formed. Around the much frequented punch howl, new and old acquaintances drank and exchanged greetings of serious and frivilous nature.

The reception did much to make tha teachers feel that their labors were appreciated, and both patrons and teachars gained through more intimate acquaintauce.

PAY-UP WEEK OCTOBER 2 TO 7

EVERYTHING IS READY FOR BIG EVENT

Duty of Every Citizen tn Make Week Successful—Merchants Offer Great Bargains.

Mayor Ross designates the first week of October as the time to square up debts. It is a national movement. Charlevoix will pass prosperity around in an endless chain.

"The thing that strikes me," said Mayor Ross yesterday, in regard to his proclamation just issued calling attention of people to National Pay-Up Week, October 2nd to 7th, "is how dependent we all are upon each other. No one class can gain at the expense of all the others. The factories cannot run without markets for their goods."

The farmer can make no money if there is none to buy his surplus products. As the farmer prospers, all prosper. As the other commercial interests of the country prosper, the farmer prospers. We must all look to each other for our living. If we turn into the channels of business the millions of dollars that we all owe eech nther so that we can again use the dollars to buy more things we need, every man who is supplying a need will proeper.

"That is the object of National Pay-Up Week, Octoher 2nd to 7th. You can help and yon can be helped if you will pay up during this week. Every business man in Charlevoix has pledged himself to pay all of his bills that he can at this time. Let's all work together. Let's pass prosperity around."

Don't make any mistake in the plan. The idea is not that you pay me so I can pay the other fellow, but I'll pay you and you pay the other fellow. If we all take it upon ourselves to start the hall rolling, we can have a real rousing pay-up week right here. If we wait for the other fellow to pay up, it might not be so much of a success as it ehould be. Thle movement bas heen taken up in Charlevoix upon the recommendation of hundreds of towns which engaged in the first National Pay-Up Week in Februnry of this year and the second National Pay-Up Week, which is announced for Octoher 2nd to 7th is to be truly national in ecope, as thousands of communities in every eection of the United States from coast to the other and from the north line to tbe Gulf of Mexico will take part in it. During this week, the energy of millions of people will be centered upon passing busy dnilars around, cleaning up old dehts, starting in anew and prosperity will certainly result from it. Get ready for National Pay-Up Week, October 2nd to 7th.

The Courier advises everyone who is interested in reducing their household and personal expenses—and, whn is not—to read the advertisement of special bargains to be offered by our progressiva merchants during National Pay-Up Week. These are all real opportunities to effect worth while savings in the purchase of many different classes of goods—opportunities which may not soon be again preeented.

FORD JITNEY BUSSES RAM ONE ANOTHER

McCann's Braad Jitney Takes Pnke at Nat Burns' Ford Truck.

Another Ford fracas. Really, it doesn't seem as though we would ba able to go to press if some Lizzie didn't cut up a half column's worth of capers. Saturday night, the Ford truck helonging to Nat Burns while running onto Bridge street from Park avenue was rammed by McCann's bread jitney running south on Bridga street.

It is hard to fix tho blame for this accident, which seems to have been caused by the drivers' mutual misunderstanding of each other's signals. Both machines were more or less bruised up, McCann's car getting a little the worst of it. No injurias resulted to the drivers.

Says Drink Water If You Wish To Grow Fat And Plump

THIN MEN AND WOMEN

Do You Want to Get Fat and Be Strong?

The troubls with most thin folks who wish to gain weight is that they insist on drugging their stomach or stuffing it with greasy foods; rubbing on useless "flesh creams," or following some foolish physical culture stunt, while the real cause of thinness goes untouched. You cannot get fat until your digestive tract properly assimilatee the food you eat. Drink a glass of cold water four or five times a day and take the following preperation known to reliable druggists almost everywhere, which seemingly embodies the missing elements needed by the digestive organs to help them convert food into rich, fat-laden blood. This preparation is called tonoline, and much remarkable testimony is given as to its successful use in flesh building. Tonoline which comes in the form of a small non-injurious tablet, taken at meals and mixed with the digesting food, tends to prepare fat, flesh and muscle building elements so that the blood can readily accept and carry them to the starved portion of the body. You can readily picture the transformation that additional and previously lacking flesh making material should bring to your cheeks, filling out hollows about your neck, shoulders and hust disappearing, and your taking on from 15 to 30 ponnds of solid healthy flesh. Tonoline is harmless, inexpensive, efficient. All druggists have it and are authorized to refund your money if weight increase is not obtained as per the guarantee found in each large package.

Caution:—Tonoline is recommended only as a flesh builder and while excellent results in cases of nervous indigestion, etc., have been reported, care should be taken about using it unless a gain of weight is desired.

The Early Drum.

Drums are probably an eastern idea introduced by the crusaders into Europe. They are frequently mentioned in accounts of the first crusade. When Edward III. of England and his queen made triumphal entry into Calais in 1347 "tambours" were among the instruments which were played in their honor. Another of these was called a "nacaire," or kettledrum, taken, together with its name, from the Arabs. The poet Chaucer also mentioned this instrument in his description of the tournament in "The Knight's Tale." The king generally kept a troop of these bandsmen or minstrels in his employ, and we read that Edward II. on one occasion gave a sum of 60 shillings to Roger, the trumpeter; Janino, the nakerer, and others for their performances.

Just Men.

If any one says that he has seen a just man in want of bread I answer that it was in some place where there was no other just man.—St. Clement.

No Sleep There.

"Porter, this berth has been slept in!"

"No, sah; I assuah you, sah. Merely occupied. It's the one over the wheels, sah."—Puck.

The City Manager

(A series of artieles on a aew type of municipal governmeat, whieb is spreading rspidly.)

Amarillo, (pop. 9,957) is situated on the plsins of Texas wbere land was sold ten years or so ago at the exorbitant price of one dollar an acre. It is four hundred miles from any city, but it has a progressive citizenship. When they had s commissloa at work on a new ehsrter In 1914, someone had heard of the city mansger plan nnd the commissloa decided to try it out.

This is nne nf the few cities where the commissioners, In choosing the city manager, took a local msn. They selected for the post M. H. Hardin, who was not an eagineer or a business man, but a young big-boned distriet court clerk and a good politieian. (He admits it himself.)

Had Lively Time.

Here was a fine ehanee for the commission-manager plan to fail.

Hardin says he had a livsly time "herding" his commissioners, but he succeeded in making them keep elear of administration detail and give him a free hand, unhampered by red tape. Then he proceeded to hustle things along and get results. He found it more fun than polities.

Hardin had to deal with people who were used to very little law and doing very mucb as they pleased. But he set his mind on getting the enforcement of a pure food and milk ordinanee. It took several months to get the dsirymen to see things his way, but he finally sueceeded in getting everybody in line. He showed true appreeistion of the spirit of the city mansger plsn by going outsids of the community to get a trained veterinarian to assist him in bis work.

Situation Serious.

The financial situation when Hardin took bold, was rather aerious; principslly the result of delinquent taxes running bsek in some cases to the organization of the elty in 1899 and amounting to sbout $29,000. The city mansger energetically collected the greater part of this amount and thus gave tbe town its first impetus toward sound fiaanee.

Hardin proved himself rsther less a politician snd more of a business man when he abolished a number of superfluous jobs.

Is Manager Type.

Mr. Hardin is a type of a growing group of managsrs of small towns, mostly young engineers with the greater part of tbeir careers before them. Among the aumber are Charles E. Ruger at Manistee, Michigan; Wallace M. Morgan at Bakersfield, Ohio; Ray S. Bllnn at Westerville, Ohio; Roland Humlsy at Albion, Michigan, aad Fraak H. Williams at Brownsville, Texas.

CHARLEVOIX HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

The enrollment this year is the smallest it has been for several years. There are 108 in the high school proper while junior high, composed of seventh and elghth graders, numbers 77.

The faculty of the high school includes six new members the present year. Miss Margaret Allen, the history instructor, is a graduate of Alma, and the niece of tbe history teacher of that college. Miss Laura M. Cole, a graduate of M. A. C., is the new English teacher. Mrs. Georgana Clapper is a thoroughly trained home training director and the city should be complimented on securing her services. Miss Hazel Gilmartia, a former County Normal student in this city and a graduate of Ypsilanti Normal, is entirely qualified to take up the work in junior high school. I. I. Beddow, also a teacher in junior, finished his college course last year. Mr. Loomis, the director of athletics and scienee, is a graduate of Olivet, where his college course was completed with extensive honors. Although new, these teachers have shown the "stuff" and are making their work a success.

The American litcrature elass is about to begin the study of Cooper's "Last of the Mohleans" in connection with their regular work.

Figures show the success of the new "Home Training" plan. Under the direction of Mrs. Clapper are 11 juniors and seniors, 19 sophomores and freshmen and 50 seventh and eighth graders. The Normal class are taking the subject Monday mornings.

Extra! The freshies gathered up enough nerve to hold a class meetings, and to elect officers. Miss Nellie Allea was chosen president, Bruee Armstrong, vice president; Miss Laura Brown, secretary, and Miss Nellie Ingalls, treasurer.

The officers of the upper classmen are as follows:

Seniors—John Walker, president; Roberta Ferguson, vice president; Bernice Crandell, treasurer; Hilda Glassford, secretary.

Juniors—Kenneth Widdifield, president; Miss Beatrice Herrington, vice president; Miss Hazel Allen, treasurer; Odillion Weed, secretary.

Sophomores—William Hampton, president; Irene Auld, vice president; Walker Miles, secretary; Miss Leone MacNeill, treasurer.

"The "Freshies" were introduced into high school by a shower of Gold Dust, water and soap. See them for particulars.

Foot Ball.

Under tbe direction of Mr. Loomis the foot ball squad is gradually growing. Although much of the material is new this year yet these recruits are showing exeeptional form. Krulick is a heady player and with a little more seasoning will be a splendid back line man. Hampton is swift and sure, and will certainly develop into a good player. The other new mea are Hallett, Miles, Merriam, Driggett and Byers.

The members of last year's team who are right on the job trying to whip the team into shape are Butler, Cartier, O'Neill and Durance. Irving Hallett and Dick Finucan have not been out for practice yet, but in all probability will be on hand to strengthen the team by next week.

The first game is with Boyne City, September 30th, at Boyne. Charlevoix has never won on Boyne's home grounds but Coach Loomis is confident that this record will be broken this year.

Varnet in a Storm at Sea.

Vernet, the celebrated palater of sea pieces, eager in the study of nature, made several long voyages in his yoanger days in order to observe the various scenes which the changeful elements exhibit. In one of these excursions undertaken merely for the love of the art a most violent gale of wind arose, when Vernet, without attending to the perils with which he was snrrounded, desired one of the sailors to lash him fast to some of the rigging. Soon after this request was granted the storm increased, attended with thunder and lightning and with every circumstance that could add to the horror of the sceue, and consternation and terror sat on every countenance, but in the young painter every emotion was lost in that of admiration, which so wholly engrossed his attention that he every now and then exclaimed in the most enthusiastic terms, "Good heavens, what a noble scene!"

NO INDUSTRIAL DEPRESSION IN ENGLAND

During the first eight months of the calendar year 1914 Great Britain was at peace, and her total exports for that period were in the neighborhood of $1,580,000,000. During the first eight months of 1916 Great Britain was engaged in the most gigantic struggle in her history, and was bearing a heavy burden of financing her allies. Many of her factories were engaged in the manufacture of war munitions, and thousands of her workmen were on the firing line, their places in the mills being taken by women. Nevertheless, the total exports of Great Britain during this eight months period were valued at nearly $2,000,000,000. Not much evidence of industrial prostration there, despite the declarstion of our free-trade Democratic friends.

Exports during the month of August, 1916, Increasod about $75,000,000 over 1915, the chief increase being in manufactured articles, cotton textiles increasing $15,000,000, and iron and steel manufactures $12,500,000. Exports of cotton goods to the United States for last August totaled 4,940,000 yards, compared with 2,952,000 yards, August, 1915; woolens, 469,000 yards, compared with 402,000 yards the same month last yenr. England is fighting and fnbricating and making progress in both directions.

Our trade figures for the eight months ended August, 1916, will not be available for some weeks, but the official figures for the six months ended June, 1916, show that our total imports from Great Britain for that period amounted to $173,000,000. For the six months ended June, 1913, under the Republicnn protective tariff, they totaled $132,000,0000. In spite of the stress of war, England increased her hold on our market for the six months period, 1916, 30 per cent over the 1913 period. For the first six months of the calendar year 1914, just before the war broke out, and under the operation of the Wilson-Underwood law, our imports from Creat Britain totaled $151,000,000, an increase of $22,000,000 over the 1913 period, but the lower rates of duty carried by the Democratic lsw resulted in less revenue, despite the increase of imports, and that revenue had to be made up hy way of interaal taxation.

England is not an exporter of raw materinls to any considerable extent. She exports manufactured products, and every dollnr's worth she disposes of in the United States means the displacement of a dollar's worth of domestic produet and the cutting down of the American laborer's opportunity to make that product. The wage rate of England is almost nne-haif that paid to labor in the United States. The wage rate of Germany is about one-third our own. Recently, at the Trades Union Congress in Birmingham, England, representatives of 2,500,000 British mill workers voted by over one million majority for a resolution demanding that Great Britnin return to a protective basis, and the resolution they adopted was as fine a specimen of the Republican argument for protection as one ever read. It declares for "the adoption of methods for restrieting or preventing the importation of chenp manufnctured goods produced at lower rates of wages and under worse labor conditions than prevail in this (England) country." The British board of trade, the first of this year, also declared for n return to the protective policy.

Were they striking at the United States, where the wage rnte is higher, and labor conditions hetter than those of England? No. They aro afraid of German competition, which, before the war, was undermining British foreign trade, and even breaking into the domestic market of John Bull. If Germany must back against a high tariff in England and France, and Russia, and the United States is operating under the near-free-trade tariff law which the Democratic party declares to he, if anything, too high, where are the products of the pittance-paid labor of Germany going to find the easiest outlet? Where will protected England sell her prodaets, if not in our free-trade market. The workmen of this country had better wake up and take a leaf from their British brethren and vote for protection, bearing in mind that Woodrow Wilson is a free-trader.

The man who runs a store account several months buying in small quantities, should never go away from the store that accommodates him, in case he should have $20 or $50 to spend and then come home with his purchases and say that he can do better at some other place than at home. It is always to be presumed that a man who is making large cash purchases can drive a better bargain than one who makes small purchases on time. We do not believe there is a town anywhere in the state where goods are sold on a smaller margin of profit than in our own little city.

The master bakers of the country have had a convention and have decreed that the five-cent loaf must go. Thus they assist in ratifying the declarations of the Baltimore platform that the advent of a Democratic administration would reduce the cost of living.

Some newspapers are printing President Wilson's various and varied utterances regarding union labor and heading the article "Where He Stands." This is a misnomer. He doesn't stand; he flops. This applies to other questions also.

Wilson has achieved the impossible. It was thought impossible to bungle anything worse than he bungled the Mexican business. And now we have his handling of the railroad question.

My cider mill starts October 9th. Will pay highest market price for cidar apples delivered. D. C. Schweitzer, 907 State St., Charlevoix. 39t2

WALKER SCHOOL RECEIVES PLATE

FIFTH IN COUNTY TO BE THUS HONORED

School Building Remodeled Along Scientific Lines and Is Now In Excellent Condition.

The fifth standard school in Charlevoix county received recognition by the state department and was awarded its plate on the night of Saturday, September 23. A fine neighborhood gathering faced the autumn storm to witness the presenting of the plate, to hear the program prepared for the occasion, and partake of the good things to eat which the good mothers of Eveline No. 5 had brought with them.

The building is now remodeled along scientific lines and is not only larger bat more healthful and comfortable. It is well decorated and fine to look upon, altogether a building of which every resident in the district may be justly proud. The result of this effort which has been largely the work of the past four months is due almost entirely to the hard work and leadership of the district board and the earnest fathers and mothers who worked with them. The director of the district is E. H. Clark, the moderator A. B. Clark and treasurer R. H. Sherman. It is not commenting extravagantly upon their work to say that they are doing more for Eveline development than could be done in any other manner in working for its community, social and educational life.

Superintendent McIntosh, of Boyne City, delivered the address of the evening, speaking about farm life, its joys and opportunities. His frank, cordial manner found a responsive chord in the hearts of all, and his views on acres of diamonds will not soon be forgotten. The boys and girls sang very spiritedly before and after the address. Miss Lorraine sang "The Truest Love Is the Mother's Love," with much feeling, and responded sweetly with the encore, "Just A Wearing for You."

Before the plate was presented in behalf of the state superintendent of of public instruction the commissioner dedicated the building to truth and health and gave a brief history of the standard schools of Michigan and the rapid increase during the past two years.

Three cheers for Eveline No. 5, the fifth standard school in Charlevoix county, the third standard school in Eveline township and one of the best in Northern Michigan.

Special.

For one week only 100 pair ladies $4.00 shoes, sizes 2½ and 3, at $2.95. Bedford's Shoe Store.

CAMPAIGN OF THE LIQUOR MEN

GENERALLY CONCEDED STATE WILL GO DRY

But They Hope to Complicate the Situation by Winning for "Home Rule."

The campaign this fall by the liquor interests, to keep Michigan from becoming dry, will be a campaign not so much against the prohibition amendment, but more for the so-called "home-rule." This much of the plans of the wets for the impending struggle between the drys and the saloon forces has been divulged by Patsy McNamara, of Manistique, Michigan, one of the wet leaders in the upper peninsula and proprietor of one of the most palatial northern Michigan liquor dispensaries. The wet headquarters in Detroit have advised that their workers in the counties, Mr. McNamara has announced, to devote their time to boosting so-called "home-rule" and let the prohibition amendment take care of itself.

"We have seen," said Mr. McNamara, "that it is apparently futile to attempt to stop the passage of the prohibition amendment in Michigan. Accordingly we have been instructed to devote our attention to the counter amendment for "home rule." If the prohibition amendment fails to get enough votes, and "home rule" passes, we win. If prohibition passes and "home rule" does not get a majority, we lose. If both pass, we will have things tied up in a ball and it will be taken up to the supreme court to untangle the mess. I have been told that if both amendments passed, the court would be likely to rule in favor of the one which carried by the biggest majority. But while the court was deciding the matter we probably would be able to continue in business.

"What we propose to do is to tell the voters to vote 'yes' on home rule and let the prohibition amendment go to the devil. And we'll go to the straits with a majority of 7,000 for 'home rule.'"

Since learning of the above plans mapped out by the wets, the drys have expanded their plans and will conduct a double battle. Their biggest effort will be to get out a majority vote "yes" in favor of the prohibition amendment to make Michigan dry, but, at the same time, it has been announced they will conduct an aggressive educational campaign to get voters to vote "no" against the so-called "home rule" amendment. If the so-called "home rule" amendment is not defeated, the drys say, it will set Michigan back 50 years in the matter of liquor legislation and control.

DANGER FOR BACHELORS WHEN WIDOWS MEET

Nine (Count 'em) at Potluck Supper Last Tuesday Afternoon.

A potluck supper was enjoyed Tuesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. William Poole on Mason street at which Mrs. Litzan, of Long Beach, California, was the guest of honor. Dr. Osler, the noted exponent of the "kill 'em at fifty" idea, would have expired in sheer despair had he been there to witness the gayety of the affair, as three of the guests were over 50, three over 60 and six over 70 years of age. Mrs. Eliza A. Stafford carried off the palm for being the oldest merrymaker present. And there were nine widows.

It is fortunate that our noble little band of dyed in the wool bachelors who have so long managed to escape the wiles of womankind, were all on the job or at their favorite nooks behind the stove downtown, or there might have been some casualties. When widows get together—well, nobody knows what might happen.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETS

Charlevoix County Dry Ass'n Plans Laid for Campaign.

W. P. Porter, of East Jordan, S. C. Smith and W. H. White, of Boyne City, R. W. Kane and Dr. Allan M. Wilkinson, of Charlevoix, constituting the Charlevoix dry committee, met in executive session Tuesday afternoon, at which meeting plans were formulated for carrying on the campaign against the liquor interests in Charlevoix county. Promise is given of a red-hot campaign which will last up to the minute the polls close, November 7, 1916.

AN OCTOGENERIAN BIRTHDAY PARTY

Mrs. John Moore Pleasantly Surprised by Her Friends On 84th Anniversary.

When Mrs. Julia Moore, who is staying with her daughter, Mrs. William Cowan, on Antrim street, returned home from attending the funeral services of Mrs. Jane Bowdish last Saturday afternoon, she found a pleasant surprise awaiting her in the presence of 17 of her old friends and neighbors, who had gathered to celebrate her birthday.

Among those present were her three daughters, Mrs. Cowan, Mrs. Empey from Atwood, and Mrs. Wagner from Norwood. And there was a cake with 84 candles. Think of it! The affair was a royal success as well as a completo surprise to Mrs. Moore and the guests departed wishing her many more happy birthdays.

LIQUOR BARS EFFICIENCY

High Catholic Churchman Says Country Suffers From Use of Intoxicants.

Washington, D. C.—The work of "identifying religion and sobriety," in the words of the Very Rev. P. J. O'Callaghan, formerly a resident of Chicago, was continued here with the opening of the forty-sixth convention of the Catholic Total Abstinence union, with 600 delegates in attendance. The chief address of the day was that of Arch-bishop Keane of Dubuque.

"The country is sufferlug from inefficiency induced by intoxicants," he ssid. "We have too much crime, poverty, misery, and sin as the consequnence of liquer. The per capita consumption of alcoholic liquors stendily locreases notwithstanding all our efforts.

"We know that if every man in America would become a totul abstainer the most serious social problem would be no more. Then the most threatening menace to our posterity would be nlmost negligible. This is not rhetoric it is cold truth."

WHAT DO THE WETS MEAN?

There Seems to Be a Diversity of Opinion Among Them.

"Does prohibition prohibit"? It seems to, according to the wets, says the American Issue, and quotes:

"Many mail order houses say that they will retire from business if the Webb-Kenyon law is declared constitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States. These men say there is no money selling liquors under the drastic limitation laws that many of the states bnve adopted and that others will adopt—they think—if the Webb-Kenyen law is valid.

"It is our opinion that the drastic limitation laws will cause a return to the license system, and we bope that they will be made more drastic than at present."—Bonfort's Wine and Spirit Circular.

The above is a sample of wet logic wbich shows hew hard it is to please the liquor interests. On one page of almost any liquor journal we find some official of the liquor interests exulting over increased dry territory and drastic Probibition law, because "it means increased sales." We turn over a page or twe nnd find some other liquor publicity man complaining because "Prohibition laws are so drnstic that liquer men can no longer make a living."

It bas been suggested that these fellows get together and agree on one line of argument to be used in explaining the decline of the liquer trade.

REPUBLICAN THRIFT IS SQUANDERED BY WILSON

Built Panama Canal Out of Current Revenues, Patriotically Hoarding Bonds in Treasury Which Democrats Filch to Hide a Deficit.

CARNIVAL OF DEBAUCHERY IN PUBLIC EXPENDITURE

Senator Penrose Believes the Lootad Condition of the Treasury Will Necesnitate the Withholding of Contracts for Battleships and Delay the Whole Scheme of Preparedness — Nation's Money Frittered Away to Finance Hare-Brained and Ill Advised Projects.

William H. Willcox, Chairman of the Republicnn National Committee, hns received from Senator Penrose a brief but positive summing up of the extravngances of the Wilson Administration during the session of Congress just about to close. The Senator says:

"When the country realizes what this Congress has done in the way of appropriations it will be dumfounded. Alrendy, it hns been shown that over a billion, seven or eight hundred million dollars have been appropriated—more money than was ever appropriated in any one year in the bistory of the American government. The total will rench nearly two billion dollars before the end of this carnival of debauchery in public expenditures is reached, because no account has been taken of the twenty-five millions for the Danish Islands, the thirty millions which the government will probably have to refund as a result of the five per cent rebate nllowed on importations brought across the seas in American bottoms, and other matters which are likely to come up.

"It is only too evident that this bill which is expected to bring in some two hundred million dollars will absolutely fail to meet even the requirements for the ill-advised and certainly not urgent projects authorized by the present Congress.

"It is now claimed that these projects are to be financed by the issuance of Panama Canal bonds. The American people will regard such a proceeding as a very queer one because the issuing of bonds by the Cleveland Administration largely helped to bring about the downfall of the Democratic party in 1896. A bond issue has ever since been viewed with abhorrence by the Democracy; now, we find the party leaders compelled, by reason of their extravngance and inefficiency, to resort to it.

"To defray the expenses of a nitrate plant and of a shipping board and many other needless projects by the issuing of Panama bonds will be in the last analysis equivalent to paying for them by bond issues. These bonds are lying in the treasury unissued as the result of the thrift and economy and wise administration of the Republican party.

"Only about $130,000,000 of bonds were put out in the construction of the Panama Canal. The balance of the cost of that stupendous undertaking was paid out of current revenues; and now, to advance the novel doctrine that these bonds which represent the thrift of preceding years shall be issued for these questionable projects is, to my mind, preposterous. In fact, it was expressly provided in the Spooner Act that Panama Canal bonds should not be issued for any other purpose than that of the construction of the Canal, and the ingenious theory that they can be issued now to repay the treasury and that then the money can be squandered by the party in power to finance doubtful projects and to make good a deficit will not alter the fact that such a deficit exists.

"No amount of reasoning on the part of the Chairman of the Committee on Finance will alter the fact that outside of preparedness there has been at least $200,000,000 of wasteful appropriations and expenditures by the present Congress. That condition of the treasury will absolutely necessitate the withholding of contracts for battleships and delay the whole scheme of preparedness.

"The figures of the Secretary of the Treasury may be juggled as they may, but when the Secretary is up against the brute fact of not having money to pay for these projects he will then find that figures will not make a surplus in the treasury."

M'KINLEY'S WAR COST LESS BLOODSHED THAN WILSON'S PEACE

By Theodore Roosevelt.

Under President McKinley we had a war with Spain. Under President Wilson we are assured that we have had "peace" with Mexico. These are the words. Now for the deeds. During the war with Spain fewer Americans were killed by the Spaniards than have been killed by Mexicans during the present "peace" with Mexico. Let me repeat this. A greater number of Americans have been killed by Mexicans during these years, when we are officially informed that we have been at peace with them, than were killed by the Spaniards during our entire war with Spain. Moreover when the war with Spain was through, it was through. But peace still continues to rage as furiously as ever in Mexico. Nor is this all. The instant effect of the outcome of the war with Spain was to put a stop to the dreadful butchery and starvation in Cuba and the Philippines, and the entry of both Cuba and the Philippines on a career of eighteen years of peace and prosperity such as they had never known before in all their checkered history. But during these three years of Mr. Wilson's "peace," the Mexicans themselves have been butchered by their own bandits steadily and without intermission; and Mexican women and children have died by thousands—probably by scores of thousands—of starvation, and of the diseases incident to starvation. In other words, Mr. McKinley's war cost less peace; and it reflected high honor on the American people; whereas Mr. Wilson's peace has been one of shame and dishonor for the American people, and one of ruin and bloodshed for the Mexicans.

SACRIFICED COUNTRY'S HONOR AND INTEREST

Mr. Wilson's defenders say he "has kept us out of war." As a matter of fact his policy in Mexico has combined all the evils of feeble peace with all the evils of feeble war. He has secured none of the benefits of war; but he has not avoided war. He has sacrificed the honor and the interests of the country; but he has not received the thirty pieces of silver.—From the speech of Col. Theodore Roosevelt, delivered at Lewiston, Maine, in behalf of Charles E. Hughes.

THE SOLDIER WHO ABSTAINS FROM ALCOHOL IS BEST

CAN MARCH BETTER AND CAN ACCOMPLISH MORE THAN EVEN THE MODERATE DRINKER.

BRANDY WORSE OF POISONS

The Use of Alcohol for the Purpose of Warmth Is Very Dangerous.

Is Germany still boosting for beer? Is it true as stated in the beer advertisement in several Wisconsin papers: "The health and efficiency department of the German army requires that every soldier in the German army drink a stipulated amount of beer every day."

The sanitary department of the German army has used the following "instructions concerning health service":

"Alcohol is indeed a stimulant at the first; but, if it is used in larger quantities, it produces a narcotic effect. Experience teaches that abstaining soldiers endure the hardships of war best. Also the beverage use of alcohol leads easily to intemperance and the slackening of discipline. Therefore, alcoholic liquors are to be used only with the greatest caution and are to be avoided entirely on the march. The use of alcebol for the purpose of producing warmth is dangerous. Its warning effects are deceptive."

Commenting on this ordinance, Sanitary Counsel, Prof. Dr. I. Schwalbe, in the German "Medical Weekly", says:

"In spite of the fact that it must be conceded that the effects of alcohol are different on different individuals and that alcohol is not a poison for every man in the same quantity; indeed, in spite of the fact that a great many persons are able to drink it regularly in moderate quantities without injury, our military authorities were induced to OMIT ALCOHOL ENTIRELY FROM THE REGULAR RATIONS OF THE ARMY BOTH IN PEACE AND IN WAR."

Lest some one may say "alcohol" does not include beer, the following significant passage is quotad from Count Von Hasseler, late Commander of the 16th Army Corps in Germany:

"The soldier who abstains altogether is the best man. He can accomplish more, can march better, and is a better soldier than the man who drinks even moderately. Mentally and physically he is better. Brandy is the worst poison of all. Next to it comes beer. Each limits the capacity and lowers mind, body, and soul. Strong drink tires and only increases thirst. For soldiers water, coffee, and, above all tea are the best drinks."

THE "OPTION" SUBTERFUGE

The Fight Must Be To A Finish In The Good State of Michigan.

The wet and dry petitions are on file at Lansing now, which means that the biggest liquor fight in the state's history is on. It will be a fight to the finish, for the issue is no longer a question of whether the state shall be all dry or partly dry, but of whether it shall be all dry or virtually all wet, says an editorial in the Adrian Daily Telegram.

The wet plan masquerades under the name of "option" plan, but it would reduce the option unit from the county to the township, village or city. By this means its sponsor hope to pull the wool over the eyes of at least some voters by invoking the imaginary blessings of "home rule."

The intent, however, is as plain as the face of the town clock. It is to put a saloon within reach of every thirsty individual in Michigan. If that were not the plan, the liquor interests would not be fighting for it. It makes little difference how many dry townships there may be, if there are wet villages and wet cities within easy distance.

The dry forces can afford to lose on the issue of statewide prohibition. The defeat of that amendment by itself would leave matters as they are now. But they cannot afford to lose the fight on the township and village option scheme. If the wets can put that across, then everything accomplished for temperance in a lifetime will be undone. It is a clever game the wets are playing. It may be a hard game to beat, but if it is not beaten, then local option prohibition becomes a farce and the liquor interests will be more firmly in the saddle than they have been for twenty years.

Good citizenship, clean politics and the general welfare of Michigan demand that organized liquor be defeated in this last desperate fight, and its defeat be made a Waterloo.

Says a Glass of Hot Water Every Morning Before Breakfast Will Take Off Fat If You Get More Fresh Air

Be Moderate in Your Diet and Reduce Your Weight with Tasco

Lack of fresh air weakens the oxygen-carrying power of the blood, the liver becomes sluggish, fat accumulates and the action of many of the vital organs are hindered thereby. The heart action becomes weak, work is an effort and the beauty of the figure is destroyed.

Fat put on by indoor life is unhealthy and if nature is not assisted in throwing it off by increasing the oxygen-carrying power of the blood, a serious case of obesity may result.

When you feel that you are getting too stout, take the matter in hand at once. Don't wait until your figure has become a joke and your health ruined through carrying around a burden of unsightly and unhealthy fat.

Spend as much time as you possibly can in the open air; breathe deeply and get from any druggist a box of tasco, take a glass of hot water every morning before breakfast then take tasco after each meal and at bedtime.

Weigh yourself every few days and keep up the treatment until you are down to normal. Tasco is absolutely harmless, is pleasant to take, helps the digestion and is designed to increase the oxygen-carrying power of the blood.

Even a few days' treatment should show a noticeable reduction in weight. There is nothing better for obesity. 34t4

"13" the Lucky Number.

The old adage of 13 being an unlucky number fails in the case of the person who holds this number on the whip drawing at W. A. Boss' store. Number 13 drew the buggy. Who it is, no one knows yet, but as soon as they make themselves known, the buggy will be handed over to them.

ADULTERATED FOODS.

Simple Tests by Which Impurities May Be Detected.

Some simple tests for adulterants in food are given by S. Leonard Bastin in the Scientific American. Here are a few of them:

Put a small bit of butter in a teaspoon and boil it over a gas flame. Real butter boils quietly, producing a quantity of small bubbles; margarine crackles and spatters.

Rub dry tea leaves in a clean white cloth. Pure tea will leave no mark; dyed tea will leave a stain.

Make an almost saturated solution of sugar in water; place this in a clear glass tube and stand it in front of some print. If the sugar is pure it should be possible to read easily through the solution.

Put a piece of bread in a saucer and pour a solution of carbonate of ammonia over it. If alum be present the bread will turn black. If the bread be pure no change will take place.

Dilute a sample of jam or jelly with an equal quantity of water. Put a bit of cotton batting into it and boil for half an hour. Now try to wash out the stain. This will be easy if the jam be pure, impossible if it has been dyed.

Add a few drops of methyl aniline violet to some vinegar. If this be pure it will not change color; if adulterated, it will turn blue or green.

Scientific Farming

GEESE ON THE FARM.

Most Economical of All the Barnyard Fowls.

A few geese should be kept on every Kansas farm. They are grazers and for that reason are the most economically raised of all barnyard fowls, according to N. L. Harris, superintendent of poultry at the Kansas State Agricultural college. A flock of geese will live during the summer on blue grass or clover pasture and will go through the winter on rye or wheat pasture except in snowy weather, when a small amount of ground grain should be furnished.

"I would not advise going into the goose business on a large scale in Kansas, because there is no close market, but for home consumption and feathers there should be a few geese on every farm," says Mr. Harris. "They are not at all profitable for eggs, because a goose will lay only thirty or forty eggs a season."

The hen goose makes a poor mother, points out Mr. Harris. It is better to set the eggs under chicken hens. Until two weeks old the goslings are somewhat delicate, but subsequently they are extremely hardy. They have to be kept out of heavy dews and rain until they are nearly twelve weeks old, for during this period "a wet goose is a dead goose."

Mr. Harris advises against feeding whole grain. Under no circumstances, he says, should it be fed unless soaked for at least twenty-four hours. The natural food for geese consists of grass, tender roots and worms.

It is not at all profitable to allow geese to run with other poultry, on account of their quarrelsome disposition. They are easily fenced. A twenty-four inch woven wire is sufficient to keep them in.

"Perhaps the Toulouse and Emden should be the most extensively raised, as they are the so called dry land varieties and require only sufficient water for drinking purposes, which makes them entirely suitable to Kansas conditions," says Mr. Harris.

TIMOTHY'S EFFECT ON LAND.

Old Notion That It Actually Improved the Soil Not Substantiated.

It is an old notion that land seeded to timothy, even though the crop be removed, is being rested and improved. This, however, is not true in any other sense than that a horse that has been driven rapidly may be considered as being rested by being driven more slowly—that is to say, timothy removes the plant food from the soil more slowly than does corn or wheat because a smaller amount of plant food is required to make the crop. While the land is in timothy the soil surface is washed out less rapidly because the surface is bound together throughout the whole year by the roots of the timothy plants. The humus is also burned out less rapidly since there is no cultivation.

The notion that timothy actually improves land doubtless grew out of the fact that when timothy sod was plowed under and the land was planted to some such crop as corn a larger crop was produced than the same land would have borne had it been in corn continuously. This is because the plant has removed plant food from the soil less rapidly than this food has become available in the soil by chemical processes. Investigations also show that a crop of timothy will leave in the soil in the form of roots and stubble over seven pounds of nitrogen to the acre against about two and five-tenths pounds per acre for wheat. All this becomes available for succeeding crops when the meadow is plowed up.

Angoras Need Pasture.

Angora goats are economical producers under anything like ordinary farm conditions. They are well adapted to grazing and can be maintained on rather thin pasture. Yet this is not desirable for best results. The goats should have ample pasture, grain and hay as supplements. Mohair has been bringing good prices recently and fresh goat meat is highly desirable as a food.

CHARLEVOIX SCHOOLS RECOGNIZED BY U. OF M.

Also on Accredited List of Chicago University—Offers Great Advantages.

The superintendent of schools has posted the following notice on the bulletin board:

Notice.

September 25, 1916.

Patrons and Students of C. H. S.:

From time to time rumors are started, in referenee to the standing of our high school, in referenee to the Universlty of Michigan, and the North Central association.

It is with great pleasure that I post the following letters as proof of our present standing with U. of M. N. C. association and University of Chicago.

Every student of the high school has a duty to perform in informing people in referenee to our standing and in ease of doubt to get information from the proper parties.

In the past some students have been a trifle thoughtless in this respect. But on further eonsideration you will see the wisdom of knowing the facts, and of spreading broadcast the high standing of your high school.

H. A. CRAIG.

One letter, dated Ann Arbor, Michigan, June 16, 1015, from Dr. A. S. Whitney, in which he states that he takes great pleasure in informing Superintendent Craig that, upon recommendation of the Committee on Diploma Schools, that the diploma relations between the Charlevoix high school and the University of Michigan are continued for the years 1915, 1916 and 1917.

The second letter was also from Dr. A. S. Whitney and dated Ann Arbor, Michigan, April 10, 1916. In this letter Dr. Whitney states that "At a reeent meeting of the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools the Charlevoix high school was eoatinued on the aeeredited list. This list includes only high schools in the north eentral territory that meet certain requirements that nre set down by North Central association. Students from high school in this list will he admitted to any university or college in the North Central territory.

The third letter was from Dr. Nathaniel Butler, of the University of Chieago, in whieh he states that it gives him grent pleasure to inform the superintendent that the board of admissions of the University of Chieago, at a recent meeting, voted to approve your high school for the relntionship of co-operation with the unlversity.

This recognition of the high school by the University of Chieago makes it possible for any of the Charlevoix graduates to enter the University of Chieago, without examination, and gives other minor ndvantages.

It is evident from this proof that the Charlevoix hlgh school is offering the same advantages that are secured by those that attend much larger high schools, sueh as are found in the larger cities. The school board's aim is the same as it has been in the past, and they will do there utmost to mnintain the present high standing of the Charlevnix high school.

CITY VISITED BY FLYING BOAT

HUNDREDS ENJOYED UNUSUAL SIGHT SUNDAY

Craft on Its Way from Muskegon to Detroit—Machine Makes 100 Miles Per Hour.

Charlevoix had an unsual visitor Sunday noon. F. W. Zimmer, of New York city, one of the Wright Brothers' crack demonstrators, and E. L. Judson, president of the Continental Motors Co., landed in Pine lake with their 100 horse power Wright flying boat, in which they had come from Carp Lake, a distance of 56 miles, in 24 minutes. Mr. Zimmer had dinner at the Hotel Charlevoix and then took a lunch to his partner, who stayed to watch the boat.

The start was made at Mona Lake, near Muskegon, where Mr. Judson has a summer home. The aviators, Mr. Zimmer driving, made their first stop at Point Betsey, just this side of Frankfort, "jumped" from there to Carp Lake and then came on to Charlevoix at the terrific speed stated above, maintaining an average altitude of 1,000 feet, although, as Mr. Zimmer said, it was necessary to fly higher at times to avoid air currents. They slowed down to 80 miles per hour approaching this town, which is "low speed" for this machine and glided down to the lake, in which they landed safely, at almost the exact spot where the hydroplane from Chicago landed three years ago.

Mr. Judson had purchased one of the flying boats from the Wright people and was making the trip with Mr. Zimmer to learn how to navigate the big "bird." After leaving Charlevoix they went on to Cheboygan, planning to go from there to Alpena and then on to Detroit, arriving in that city Sunday night.

Some idea of the effect of the air impact caused by the great speed at which they traveled may be gained from the fact that each of the men wore breast protectors three inches thick and had their heads muffled in heavy caps with ear laps. The rush of air and the sound of the engine effectually prevent conversation while traveling at such speed. The weight of the two men combined was nearly 400 pounds.

FROST ALMOST ON THE PUNKIN' VINES

Time for Residents to Begin to Hunt Up the Heavies.

Hunt up the heavies—there is frost in the air and the weather man promises continued cool weather. The penetrating wind chills the bones to the marrow—zipping through summer raiment. But it is probably that the high wind saved us from a killing frost the past week. Although one had been foretold, the earliest risers this morning did not see the expected white hoar covering their gardens and porch plants.

The equinoctial storms are in our midst, apparently, for the season is at hand and the rain is here also. And when the rain stops, it's going to be fall instead of summer any longer. The equinoctial storms are the best indication that summer is over. And now all we will have to do as regards the weather is to look forward to Indian summer.

And by the way—Only 79 shopping days before Christmas.

REST ROOM FOR LADIES

Save That $45.00

The average family of five consumes five barrels of flour per year, or one barrel per year per member, according to government statistics.

Average cost of 196 pounds of IRON DUKE FLOUR, period of three years	$7.60
Average cost of 29 quarts milk	2.32
Average cost of 58 yeast cakes	.87
Average cost of 7 pounds sugar	.56
Average cost of 7 pounds lard	.88
Average cost 58 cups mashed potatoes	.23
Average cost fuel, 29 quarts water and 5 pounds salt	1.51
Total cost of baking one barrel of IRON DUKE FLOUR into bread	$13.97

The above ingredients sometimes sell for a little more, sometimes a little less but the figures are a high average. Just at present prices are higher, this however does not alter the values comparatively.

This formula will produce 383 thirteen ounce loaves of delicious home bread.

You pay 5c per loaf for each 13 ounce loaf of bakers bread, consequently 383 loaves of the boughten article cost you $19.15, or $5.18 more.

These 383 loaves of home made bread contain 29 quarts or 7¼ gallons of sweet milk worth at 8c per quart, $2.32. Most bakers bread contains water.

By planning to make your bread when the range is being used for heating or other cooking the cost of the fuel can at least be divided.

On the farm the cost of milk and potatoes is less than shown here.

Home made bread is better quality, better flavor, more healthful, more wholesome, more nutritious especially when made from IRON DUKE.

Home made bread does not dry out as quickly, does not become stale so soon, lasts longer, goes further.

Also there is the satisfaction of making your own bread, of hearing the family express their delight over its goodness.

Thus you have saved certainly $5.18. Probably $2.32, and all or at least part of $1.60, making a total of $9.10 on every barrel, either in cash or added nourishment, or

BELGIUM UNDER GERMAN RULE

PROGRESS MADE SINCE DEVASTATION OF COUNTRY

Ruined and Repaired—Crushed and Revived—Wonderful Reorganization During Past Two Years.

If your countrymen are ever going to set things right in Mexico here is your lesson, here in German-administered Belgium.—Lindbeck, the Danish publicist, ta tha writer.

Brussels, Aug. 5.—I purpose to write simply tbe story of occupied Belgium.

That story is unique in the annals of military conquest. It is the story of a land that is being administered along the lines of the most scientific and most modern social service by an enemy who less than two years ago was fighting his way seross tbree of the richest provinces of the kingdom—from the steel and iron capital of Liege in the northeast to the coal capital of Mons in the southwest.

It is the story of an enemy who is expertly doing a most thorough, tedious, and thankless work of reorganization in eight out of nine Belgian provinees, wbile in the ninth his guns still are raining sheils. Belgium is a land at work and a land at war.

In the southwestern corner of Flandre Oceidentale destruction continues; but in all the sister provinces system prevails. Six sevenths of the population of Belgium is irked by the rigors and vexed by the strictness of military occupation.

Only a fraction of the province inhnbited by the remaining seventh is really a war area; but small as is that fraction it is sufficient to create a situation without a psrallel in history.

This country, which is icss than 200 miles wide at its greatest breadth, knows a part of the German soldiery as commanders of twenty-one centimeter guns and a part of it as overseers of every phase of industrial and agricultural life from diamond grinding works, coal mines, and coke ovens to dairies and breeding fnrms.

On the heights by Ciney in the province of Namur a German officer is superintending the model dairy and the peasnnts call him the commander of the cow cavnlry; in the hollows below Ciney a German officer is keeping books on the output of the quarries.

That is the Belguim of 1916. The German administrntion of it comprehends a satire and a marvel. The destroyers have become the rebuilders. The conquered hnve beeome the docile if not the willing pupils of the greatest ndministrators who have marched nnd fought and huilt in Europe since Trajan set his tablet into the wall of rock by the pass of Kszan to commemorate not alone his Dacinn conquests but his Dacian road-building as well. The words he chiseled there 17 centuries ago may still be read from the deck of the Danubc steamers.

It will be so with the record of tbe German occupation and ndministration of conquered Belgium. The irony of the present work—the spectacle of commanders wbo assign two thirds of their forces to rebuild and one third to destroy within the boundaries of n tiny kingdom—will not be lost upon the world.

But whstever the world may think of Germany and of the Germans, the marvel of the German ndministration of a densely populated and intensely productive country, a country hostile to its heart's core, remains. Fsise accounts of the German advance through Belgium in the first weeks of the present war not only gained credence but found favor throughout tha world. The account of the work of rehabilitation in Belgium will gain little credence and less favor.

Some day the story will be written from an smazing wealth of detail by eool hands for cool minds. Some day the marvel will be believed and history will estimate the work done by the Germans in Belgium in the months following September, 1914, as in many respects the most interesting phasc of the war and in all soeial respects the most important phase of it.

The work is fraught with lessons in social eeonomy for the whole world. It is selentific; it is thorough, it is comprehensive, and it is done under the most disheartening conditions. If the moralist insists that Germany should do penance for its violation of Belgium, the moralist may in some degree be satisfied, for Germany is now doing that penanee, in the form of hard, praetical work, msinly undertaken with the idea of helping the people of Beigium.

It is work that requires the time of thousands of military experts who might be at the front and of hundreds of civilian experts who might be busy in Germany. As to the cost in money, it must run daily into hundreds of thousands of marks.

Born with a passion for hard work and schooled by the great eleetor, by Frederick William I, and by Frederick the Great in the minutiae of administration, they go at their present tasks with a gusto which no rebuffs can dampen and no discouragements lessen. Their joy is in tbeir work because it is work; their reward is in the contemplation of something done.

From the governor general, sitting in a quiet villa in the environs of Brusseis, to the young lieutenant stationed at Namur and watehing the native sugar manufacturer at Gambloux, twelve miles away, to see that he does not gouge his compatriots by exceeding the limit price for sugar this is the attitude of the German administration of Belgium.

They keep account of every penny expended and every penny produeed, of every field restored to tillage, of every factory put baek into operation, of every branch line and canal restored to traffic, of overy coal shaft reopened. At night, after a hard day's riding, they study and tabuiate these figures and prepare "Report 783-D"—and find their reward.

It would be fantastic to suppose that the Germans either expect any or receive much gratitude for their social work in Belgium. You can not block n brench in a man's wall and trample bis kitchen garden and his flower beds and then expect his to display any special ardor when, with one foot planted firmly on his neck, you set things to rights.

No, the German does not expeet grntitude from the Belgians, for he has some sense of humor nnd he talks less cant aad—thinks less cnnt than the mnn of any other race; but what—to a remarkable degree—he has won and does receive is n certain kind of respect from the Belgians.

The Belgians man of affairs—especially the manufacturer and the mine operator—pays to the German that respect which mankind, half grudgingly, half resentfully, always pays to the competent. That tribute is about the only one the Germans receive.

The world still thinks and speaks of Belgium as a stricken land. Such in many ways it is. It is strieken in its pride and stricken in its initiative and stricken in its pocket. It has been strieken by death and by shocking material loss. In soul, mind, and body it hns suffered. No man of sense could refuse it his pity and no mnn of feeling his affection.

But life resumes. Beigium is at work ngain. The fires are lighted. Wheels nre turning. Colossal engines are lifting nnd crushing. Every day for many days I have heard the forges roaring and the machines humming—heard the rattle of hlnsts in the quarries and the creaking of the cages bringing the men up from the coal pits at evening.

I have seen the glass furnaces glowing at Jamappes and Jumet, have laughed with the pretty girls who bend with a flower between their lips over the bobbins in the cordage factory nt Gemblonx, and have watched the women going about the weeding of the fields of Namur like connoisseurs going inch hy inch over the design and fabric of an antique rug.

I have come in contact with workmen in every department of the kingdom's manifold industrial life, from the poorly paid diamond grinders in Antwerp to the pitifully paid boys and girls who rolls cigars in the factories at Vilvorde, and I have seen them making plows in the province of Namur and pottery in the province of Hainault.

I have watched the Germans struggling with, and wonderfully solving the problem of how to get into the country the raw materials required to keep this multitude of industries going—a problem which the blockade renders gigantic.

In the last two years it has been my privilege to know Belgium in three aspects, and its present aspect is the most fascinating and most instructive of the three. I knew Brussels and Antwerp and the gay dissolute, busy people before the war. I knew the central and the southerly provinces in the bitter days of August, September, and October, 1914, the days of ruin and death and disorganization when the cottages of Brabant and Hainault were still smoldering and the cottage floors were wet with crimson stains.

Those were days of enormous interest; but, alike for wonder and instruetion, these days surpass them, and the outstanding marvel of them is that of how a population can readjust and resume, and how normally in its physical essentials life goes on in a region which the rest of the world thinks of as a place of mourning and privation.

For all the ordinary activities of existenee the people of Beigium go nbout in freedom. The fields are cultivated more intensively than ever before, and the prices of produee are high. The agricultural population of Belgium is making money, and, if it were not for the inhumanity of the thought, the people of the almost exclusivcly agricultural provinee of Luxemburg would confess that the longer the war goes on the richer they will be.—James O'Donnell Bennett in Chicago Tribune.

WHY YOU ARE NERVOUS

The nervous system is the alarm system of the human body.

In perfect health we hardly realize that we have a network of nerves, but when health is ebbing, when strength is declining, the same nervous system gives the alarm in headaches, tiredness, dreamful sleep, irritability and unless corrected, leads straight to a breakdown.

To correct nervousness, Scott's Emulsion is exactly what you should take; its rich nutriment gets into the blood and rich blood feeds the tiny nerve-cells while the whole system responds to its refreshing tonic force. It is free from alcohol.

VAN PELT'S TOURING DIARY
Trip No. 1
(Second Day Out.)

Friday, September 15, 1916.

Left Manistee 7:30 a. m.
Arrived Scottville, 8:35 a. m.
Arrived Pentwater, 9:30 a. m.
Arrived Shelby, 10:30 a. m.
Arrived Montague, 12:00 noon.

Stopped for dinner at the Franklin House, "The House of Quality On the Pike," Peck & Peck's Son, proprietors.

Left Montague, 12:40 p. m.
Arrived Muskegon, 2:15 p. m.
Grand Rapids, 4:00 p. m.

Roads all exceptionally good except last 10 or 12 miles going into Montague. There is some strife on between the factions—one recommending this tour instead of the West Michigan Pike, which is the one we should have taken. It is queer how people will knock. If I lived five miles from the route selected for a dependable road—concrete, which they all admit is the only one that will last for a long, long time, I'd vote for that road, knowing that I'd have part of the way to my trading point, instead of voting against it and not having any.

The weather has turned cold and we find the top up and the curtains drawn very acceptable. Nothing between here and Charlevoix begins to appeal to us except along White lake. Here we found large houses nnd barns—although the buildings need paint—and fruit trees along the side of the road. We have only had time to converse with a few men. All admit that good roads have increased the price of their property and they look for good results for being on the Pike.

It's now 10 p. m. and time for all honest men to be in bed, so I'll sleep (the sleep of the just, I hope) in one of the new Pantlind hotel's bully good beds.

Trip No. 1, Third Day Out.
Saturdny, September 16, 1916.

We left Grand Rapids at 7:30 a. m., passing Odessa, 39 miles out, at 9:00 a. m. Here, we had the worst street crossings imaginable. I remarked to a mnn standing near, "Your crossings are mighty bad." "Yes, sir," he said, "D—n bad." "Thank you," I snid, "that hardly expresses it, but it is pretty good." I can say some things in this line, too, but I can't do the particular crossing justice. We passed much clay soil and saw but few cars. Woodbury, 9:20 a. m.—poor roads. About 80 per cent of all the cars we meet nre "Henry's Specials." Sunset, 9:35 n. m. This town has a big sign, as follows: "Tbis is Sunset. Welcome," which I thought a good thing. Many towns we pass through we do not know the nume of exeept by the Blue Book directory. We have seen several of the same kind of road men as are seen on our Norwood road, using sod for the road bed. We humped and bumped over them, singing "Home, Sweet Home," while we jumped the back brenkers. Grand Ledge, 10:30 a. m. We hnve left a lot of very bad roads behind for others to enjoy. Near here we snw our first good sugar beets and I said "This would make big Henry Wagner smile." Some of the farmers have used the sides of the road by planting eorn nnd it was good corn, too. Lansing, 11:00 a. m. Weberville, 12:30 p. m., where we stopped for dinner. Flowerville, 1:50 p. m. Oh, what a lot of impassable ronds we have left behind us. They are making deep gravel roads and several cnrs got stuck. One man said that he knew they were fooling away their money on these roads, that they ought to huild conorete roads. I snid, "No, not in this cny soil. If you had good drninage as we have and a good loam soil, it would bo the best you could uso nnd it would last a life time. Brighton, 3:00 p. m., nnd was in Detroit at 5:00 p. m., making a drivo of 438 miles the first three days. It's now 9:30 p. m. and I'll say good night.

Card of Thanks

I wish to thank all those who ordered furnaces last week, also those who read my ad. It is some job to write an ad, and I always feel good when I am sure that it has been read. I also wish to state that I may have to discontinue the sale of PENINSULAR FURNACES as the coal dealers are making such a fuss. They all claim the sale of a Peninsular Furnace cuts down their output. However, I am determined to sell a few more, so get your order in quick if you need a furnace. Hoping you haven't got a furnace I beg to remain.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN HAPPENINGS

Events of Interest to Courier Readers

Indian Attacks Aged Squaw.

Sheriff Purple, of Petoskey, had an unusual experience last week when he was called to Middle Village to take charge of William Chingwa, an Indian with a peculiar obsession. The Indian probably will be sent to the asylum for the insane at Traverse City.

The immediate cause for the apprehension of Chingwa was an attack on an old Indian woman, who, he said, was "ufter" his wife. He asserted that this woman projected her spirit into the body of a dog, and that the dog, thus "possessed" and guided, was trying to kill his faithful squaw. He assaulted the woman as she was going to the spring, but her injuries are not serious.

Chingwa had been roaming around nights for several months with a gun with which he had been shooting at this dog of his fancy—which none other ever has seen, and the terrorized village called for the sheriff.

Largest Wheat Yield On Record.

G. A. Brigham, of Buckley, has the wheat production record for that county this season. He secured from the Michigan Agricultural college a year ago, two bushels of Red Rock wheat and sowed it on his farm near Buckley. Mr. Brigham just threshed his crop and from the two bushels of seed he threshed 100½ bushels of fine wheat. The county agent has been trying to get more men to try this wheat as it is the recommended variety for the county. In order to help this work along Mr. Brigham is going to keep all of his wheat for seed and will only sell to one man enough seed to sow one acre.

Mr. Brigham also secured a bushel of Russian rye from the Michigan Agricultural college at the same time and from this one bushel he threshed 29¾ bushels of the very finest rye ever grown in this section. This is a record breaking crop for rye in this section and proves the test that the seed secured from the M. A. C. is A No. 1.

Buys Boyne City Grocery.

A deal was closed last week whereby Vollie Fox, formerly of Horton Bay became possessor of the East Side grocery, of Boyne City, and Hays & Co., former proprietors, become owners of a farm near Horton Bay.

Mr. Fox conducted the Horton Bay farm for eight years, selling out to his brother, L. C. Fox, two years ago. Since then he has been dealing in cattle, shipping produce and farming. He will move his family to Boyne City in the near future, where he already has many business and social friends.

Another Pioneer Gone.

Benjamin West, an honored resident of Bay township for the past 35 years, passed away at his home at six o'clock last Thursday morning. Mr. West had been ill for some time and his enfeebled condition, owing to advanced age, made it impossible to weather the storm. He was 71 years of age.

Mr. West came to this section from Canada nearly two score years ago. He purchased a farm near Horton Bay where he has resided ever since, becoming a well known and respected farmer. He is a veteran of the Civil war, during which he saw active service with Michigan troops.

Funeral services were held from the Horton Bay Evangelical church, Sunday afternoon at one o'clock.

Deceased is survived by the widow four daughters, all at home, and two sons, Robert and Albert, both of whom are farming near the old home.

LIVE STOCK HUSBANDRY

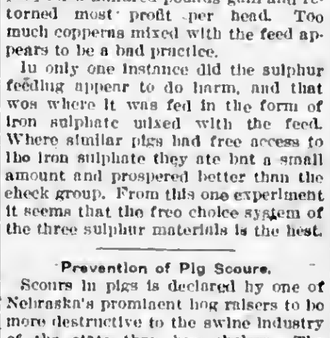
SOME GOOD RESULTS OF PIG CLUB WORK

The pig club work, which is designed to encourge farm boys to raise good pigs, has been extended rapidly through the co-operative efforts of the United States department of agriculture and the agricultural colleges. By July 1, 1915, the agricultural colleges of the following states had joined with the department in furthering this movement: Louisiana, Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina, Kentucky, Indiana and Nebraska. During the fall of 1915 it was taken up in Texas, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Massachusetts, California and Oregon. The work will be extended to other states as fast as funds permit. During 1915 there were over 10,000 club members in the states named, of whom 5,827 were in Louisiana, Alabama and Georgia, where the work has been in progress two years or longer.

Some trouble has been experienced in getting the members to keep complete records throughout the year. Inducements have been offered to members sending in complete reports, such as a year's subscription to one of the good swine papers, a free ticket to the state fair or seed sufficient to plant a pasture and a small area in some forage crops for the pig. But while these have helped to some extent the percentage of members sending in reports is smaller than it should be. It is hoped that the percentage will increase as the organization is improved from year to year.

The report in 1914 of the members in Alabama showed the average number of pigs per member in the spring was 1.35 and the average weight was thirty-four pounds. In the fall the average number of pigs per member was 1.92 and the average weight was 126 pounds. The increase in the number of pigs per member was due to many sows farrowing a litter during the summer, and these young pigs in turn lowered the average weight of the pigs in the fall. The average daily gain per pig was 0.72 pound, made at a cost of $5.20 per 100 pounds. Of all the pigs raised by the pig club boys in the various states in 1914 the average cost for each 100 pounds gain in live weight varied between $4.25 and $5.20. During that time the price of hogs ranged from $7 to $9 per 100 pounds, showing a good profit from the standpoint of the market hog alone.

In Louisiana, Alabama and Georgia the average valuation of all members' pigs in the spring was $9.01, $5.50 and $11.26 per head, respectively, while the average valuation in December was $22.26, $17.14 and $13.60. The low valuation of the hogs in Alabama was due to the facts that about 80 per cent of them were meat hogs and that there were twenty-one litters of pigs included in the December valuation, which lowered the average. The valuation in December of the original pigs which started in the spring, along with their increase, was $27.28 per head. The high prices in Georgia were due to the fact that almost all of the pigs were registered. The average valuation of the Louisiana club members' hogs was $22.20, while the average valuation of the hogs of the state was $7.70.

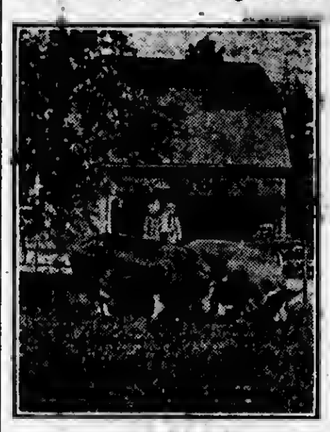


Jack Starr of Midland, Tex., and his registered Duroc-Jersey pig. Age of pig, eleven months; weight of pig, 490 pounds.

Community Breeding.

For years the community breeding of live stock has been urged upon farmers, but with very little success. Although its value and advantages have been preached to them repeatedly, it has been difficult indeed to get a large number of men to all agree to raise only one breed of stock.

The advantages of community breeding have been emphasized to the boys and strenuous efforts made to have it started, with the result that in many counties one breed of hogs has been adopted as the standard of the county, and that breed is being raised almost exclusively. In Faulkner county, Ark., where the purchase of pigs was financed by banks for seventy-five boys, 97 per cent of them had registered hogs of one breed, while in Sebastian county, Ark., 90 per cent of the ninety-one boys had registered hogs of another breed. There are several parishes in Louisiana and counties in Alabama, Georgia and North Carolina where the boys of a county are specializing in one breed. In such counties the best and most successful pig club work is being done because the boys raising pure bred hogs almost exclusively can obtain breeding stock at home for less money, can secure better breeding stock because they have a greater number from which to select and can sell many more hogs for breeding purposes, as each of those counties is becoming recognized as a breeding center for a certain breed of hog, and with such a reputation come increased orders for breeding stock. This is one of the great achievements of the pig club work, and a success is being made by the boys where their fathers have failed. This emphasizes to the boys the advantages of co-operation, and after the one experience as boys it will doubtless be much easier to get co-operation among the members after they become men than it has been with the grown folks of the present day.



Willard Buckler of Pittsfield, Mass., champion of the Massachusetts Pig club, and his pigs. Pigs were fed standard grain ration while they grazed on rape. During the last ninety-two days they made a gain of 421 pounds, or an average gain of 2.28 pounds per pig per day.

In many counties the four club idea is being advanced among the young folk, and this usually embraces the pig club. In all states the boys are encouraged to plant some forage crops for their pigs and furnish them permanent pasture. If the boy can plant three or four kinds of forage on small areas the results are better and he learns much about the growing of such crops. This emphasizes the diversification idea to the boy, and he learns one of the lessons of good farming that often have been difficult for mature farmers.—W. F. Ward in United States Department of Agriculture Year Book.

SULPHUR FOR SWINE.

Experiments Seem to Prove That It Is Beneficial For Hogs.

Dr. A. W. Dox of Iowa college has been carrying on some experiments in feeding sulphur to swine. That sulphur and its compounds may be a benefit in swine feeding is somewhat indicated in preliminary figures which cover sixty days of feeding. However, it is only one trial, and it would hardly be in order to generally recommend sulphur feeding on such meager data.

The sulphur was fed in three forms—the common powdered sulphur, sodium sulphate and iron sulphate or copperas. Some of the hogs were fed one of these alone. Others received all of them in self feeders, and still others were fed the sulphur mixed with their other feeds.

All the sulphur fed groups, with the exception of the heavy fed copperas group, did better than the check lot. Where all three sulphur materials are allowed, according to the free choice system, the pigs made the most rapid gains, ate the most, required the least feed for a hundred pounds gain and returned most profit per head. Too much copperas mixed with the feed appears to be a bad practice.

In only one instance did the sulphur feeding appear to do harm, and that was where it was fed in the form of iron sulphate mixed with the feed. Where similar pigs had free access to the iron sulphate they ate but a small amount and prospered better than the check group. From this one experiment it seems that the free choice system of the three sulphur materials is the best.

Prevention of Pig Scours.

Scours in pigs is declared by one of Nebraska's prominent hog raisers to be more destructive to the swine industry of the state than hog cholera. The causes are overfeeding, change in feed, decayed feed, lack of exercise or dirty water. Sometimes filth in peas and bedding is an additional cause when it is taken into the pig's system from the sow's udder or from the navel. The correction of these conditions is the first measure to be adopted. In case scouring has started, the sow's feed should be cut down to a small amount of oats or bran. When the trouble is corrected the ration should be increased gradually.

"Pa," said little Willie, "what is the unit rule?"

"Why—er—why, my boy, it's about the same thing as prevails here in this family," said Mr. Slithers. "You may have noticed that whatever your mother says goes."—Judge.

FARM STOCK.

If you are working for both of mutton use a good, large, meaty ram.

Fit the horse's collar and harness carefully, so there will be no delays from galled places.

Scours in pigs is an indication of indigestion in the mother. Powdered charcoal fed in the sow's slop will usually control the trouble.

Wool of good quality, quantity and texture grows only on the backs of thrifty sheep.

Lift the collars often and let air circulate to the heated shoulders and breasts of the working horses.

Pigs make the heaviest and cheapest gains in live weight during the first two months of their existence.

Discourtesy.

Discourtesy does not spring merely from one bad quality, but from several—from foolish vanity, from ignorance of what is due to others, from indolence, from stupidity, from distraction of thought, from contempt of others, from jealousy.—La Bruyere.

Kiss Producers.

"I wish mistletoe were in season all the time," said he.

"Why?"

"It means kisses."

"Orange blossoms are never out of season," pluted the girl.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

CITY LIGHTING SYSTEM CAUSE OF DISSATISFACTION

Auxiliary Plant Said to Be a Mess of Junk—Now Agitating Bond Issue.

The unprecedented failure of the city's lighting system a week ago Tuesday afternoon and evening cannot be laid to the Rock Product company's inability to furnish the required current. It was found necessary to clean boilers and the plant shut down about the middle of the afternoon, after notifying the city plant that it would be expected to carry the load. This was attempted, but the miserably inadequate equipment, which we understand has been practically condemned, proved its worthlessness as an auxiliary and resulted in several hours money loss and inconvenience to current users throughout the city.

Our understanding is that the council has been repeatedly urged to replace the present engine at the city works, which has long since passed its usefulness, and they have as repeatedly refused or delayed consideration of the matter. It was confidently expected that when we got through (?) with the Bellaire mess, the service would assume at least a reasonable state of efficiency, but the contrary has been the case. It does not run in our recollection that the cessations of current, while possibly more numerous, were of such long duration.

It would certainly seem that the gentlemen who have apparently turned a deaf ear to the remonstrances and appeals of those who are daily risking their lives taking care of this antiquated junk might at least bend attentively towards those whom they have pledged themselves to faithfully represent.

Possibly, a little of the people's money, hard won through three short months, squandered on the "tarfest" inaugurated late in the present season, during the fall rains, might have been turned in the direction of the city's lighting plant with profit.

Alderman Ceiken's resolution at Monday night's council meeting, to bond the city for $20,000 to be used for a municipal lighting plant is but another illustration of the haphazard methods employed in the past. The expenditure of even this sum of money which, in our estimation is but half of what would be actually needed, should be given the closest of attention before any action is taken.

We would suggest that the city council employ some competent engineer to make plans and estimates of the city's needs. In connection with this, we would also suggest that they employ a competent man to take charge of it. We need an expert—and by this we don't mean a rule-of-thumb amateur, but a real expert in his line who can take charge of our city water and lighting systems and produce results.

The question of an adequate lighting system in Charlevoix is a most vital one. Practically the only industries we have at present depend solely upon electricity for power use. We might ask at this time, what could we offer as an inducement in the way of electrical service to any manufacturing industry that might want to locate in our beautiful city. At present, we couldn't guarantee 24 hours of continuous juice for an eight candlepower light without taking into consideration the amount that would actually be needed for practically any industry that might locate here. It is a situation where good sound business judgment should be exercised—not spasmodic flareups on the impulse of the moment.

Our city fathers will undoubtedly exercise all possible precautionary measures needed, but they will find it a bigger proposition than has ever confronted them in the conduct of their own private business. Anyway, it is high time to do something, so, get busy, Mr. Councilman, only—don't install another gas engine.

Good Attendance Desired.

Every member of the Methodist church should be present Sunday morning to get in line with the program for the year. The pastor will tell why he returned for the fifth year. To get the best results the early co-operation is necessary. The Epworth League will meet at 6:30 p. m.

PROHIBITION MEETING AT MARION TOWN HALL

Effort Will Be Made to Organize Township Committee.

Friday evening next a meeting will be held at the town hall by those interested in the campaign for statewide prohibition for the purpose of organizing a township committee to work in co-operation with the county committee.

Marion township holds the banner for having within its limits the largest number of signers to the petition for the statewide amendment and efforts are under way to keep the township in the lead in registering the largest vote in favor of prohibition on November 7th.

Orchestra and choir from Charlevoix will be present to lend enthusiasm to the meeting.

STATE BOARD OF HEALTH BUSY

FREE EXAMINATIONS TO THOSE WHO WANT THEM

Dr. De Kleine Says County Should Have a Well Organized Health Department.

The free examinations for tuberculosis that will be held in this city in the Masonic temple on Tuesday and Wednesday of next week, from 8:30 a. m. to 5:00 p. m., should mean more to the people of the county than the mere finding out how extensive the disease is here, according to Dr. William DeKleine, in charge of the state board of health survey.

"When we go into a county to make these surveys," said Dr. De Kleine, "we try of course to make the work as thorough as it can be made. But even at its best we cannot hope to begin to find all the cases of the disease in any given county. In covering the whole state with its 83 counties in less than two years we can give only a very brief time to each county, and the best that can usually be hoped for is to indicate to a community how serious the situation with reference to tuberculosis in their community is. The real results must consist in work that each community does for itself.

"There is not a county in Michigan that begins to do as much for curbing this and other preventable diseases as should be done. This county, for instance, as well as all other counties in the state should have a well-organized county health department. And in addition to that, this county should either build a sanatorium of its own or unite with one or two adjoining counties to erect such an institution where patients can be taken care of when the disease is still in its early stages.

"Public health everywhere should receive more attention than it is receiving today. Only by adopting measures of defense against disease can the people of this state hope to wage a successful fight against tuberculosis and other preventable diseases."

Free examinations will also be held in Boyne City, October 11, 12 and 13; East Jordan, October 10 and 11, and Bellaire, October 12 and 13.

HOME BOY HONORED

Ray H. Knight Appointed Wheelsman On Ocean Going Steamer.

A peculiar honor has fallen upon one of our Charlevoix boys—Ray H. Knight, who, while in Ashtabula, Ohio, last Thursday, where he had taken his boat, the Andaste, for repairs, was appointed one of three wheelsmen to pilot the new ocean going steamer, Sekstant, recently launched at the Ashtabula yards on her trial trip. This is a position of great responsibility as well as of serious concern to the owners, who naturally are anxious to have the big liner behave her prettiest and Ray has every reason to be proud of the confidence placed in him.

HOME TEAM MADE FINE SHOWING

SATURDAY IN FIRST GAME OF THE SEASON

Held Last Season's Champions Down to Score of 12 to 6—Features of the Game.

The Charlevoix foot ball team showed a return to the old time form last Saturday, when they held Boyne City, last season's northern Michigan champions, to a 12-6 score. This was the first game for the home team, and was a distinct surprise to those who had not been watching the team, and did not know how they could fight.

Finucan caught the ball on the kickoff, and gave a neat little exhibition of broken field running. Then, with a sequence of silent signal plays which caught Boyne off their guard, the boys nearly made their downs, but were forced to punt.

Boyne's heavy team broke through our defense and by consistent gains, being in practically constant possession of the ball, got a touchdown, but failed to kick goal.

After the next kickoff, our line seemed to be weakening and when Boyne obtained the ball they marched it down to striking distance of our goal, where Repp fumbled and Cartier, in the right place as usual, caught the ball on the bound and ran 90 yards for a touchdown. No goal. Score at end of first quarter 6-6.

In the second quarter Charlevoix made Boyne earn their one touchdown, making the score 12-6. No goal. In the second half, with but few lapses, some real foot ball was shown the spectators, and no scores were made.

A peculiar feature of the game was that only one forward pass was completed by either team. Boyne City made none, but intercepted one of ours. Charlevoix completed one forward pass for a substantial gain. Hallett out-punted the Boyne man consistently. Every man on the home team was a star. Butler made some good gains around the end when they were needed. Cartier was here, there and everywhere, and made some fine tackles. Supernaw was hard to get out of the way, and although he has only been out two or three nights has already made a place for himself. We have not the space to tell of the merits of each individual.

Repp, Lett, and Aldrich made most of the gains for the enemy. Time was only taken out once for an injured player, and only one substitution was made.

Summary: Time—Game, 3:30; quarters, 12 and 10 minutes. Referee—Bachellor. Umpire—Beddows. Timekeeper—Warren. Head linesmnn—Heinz. Substitutions—Charlevoix, Krulik for Driggett. Score—Boyne City, 12; Charlevoix, 6.

We have a home game Friday at 3:30. Come out and see our boys beat East Jordan.

TWELVE HUNDRED MILE RIDE IN FORD CAR

L. E. Crandall and Wife Make Long Run With No Breakdown.

L. E. Crandall and wife have returned from their recent trip through southern Michigan, Ohio and lower Ontario on which they were accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Behant and Mrs. Tracy, of Petoskey, who have gone on to Niagara Falls. They took in the West Michigan fair at Grand Rapids and spent several days in Toledo where they have relatives.

Mr. Crandall reports no breakdowns on the trip of 1,200 miles, which was accomplished on $5.00 worth of gas. Some example of Ford economy. He says they have had no rain in the southern part of the state since June and that roads are good. The party carried a tent and sleeping cots and made camp wherever they might be at night, traveling only in the day time.

Sunday at Baptist Church.

In the morning we will preach to church members on "The Bible Vine," and in the evening to back sliders and unsaved on "Serving Two Masters." You should hear these sermons which opens our campaign of Evangelism for the winter. Yours for a great revival.

MASS MEETING WELL ATTENDED

LOCAL SPEAKERS ADDRESS BIG AUDIENCE

Prediction Made County Will Give Big Dry Majority—Neighboring Towns Represented.

The mass meeting held at the M. E. church last Sunday evening was a success from every standpoint. The attendance filled the church side room and platform. The large chorus choir added to the general enthusiasm with its spirited singing of songs appropriate to the occasion. The song rendered by Miss Mildred Eckinger was especially pleasing, entitled "Molly and the Baby," the audience joining heartily in the chorus. The orchestra made a fine impression also.

Mayor Ross was the first speaker on the program and as usual made a hit with his original style of handling his subject. Supervisor Cook gave as his conviction that the liquor business existed because of the fact that some men so low in scale of society would go into the business for the sake of the profit in it. He stated his belief in the prohibition of the traffic in Michigan.

Superintendent Craig of the city schools gave a very convincing talk on the effect of alcohol even in the smallest quantity on the efficiency of a worker, illustrating his talk with a diagram.

A fine delegation from Boyne City were present including W. H. White, S. G. Smith, Mr. McCutcheon and more than a dozen others. The interest manifested in the meeting bodes ill to the open saloon in Michigan so far as Charlevoix county is concerned. The prediction is freely made that the county will return from 1,000 to 1,500 majority for the statewide prohibition amendment.

The home rule amendment with its iniquitous provision reducing the unit from county to city, village or township in order to destroy the work done for the dry cause by local option will get an even greater vote against it.

ERECT MODERN SUMMER HOME

FIFTEEN THOUSAND DOLLAR COTTAGE ON NORTH SIDE

E. J. Block, of Chicago, Joins Charlevoix's Summer Colony by Building Beautiful Home.

E. J. Block, of Chicago, is erecting a $15,000 dwelling on his property just north of Mount McSauba. The house, which will be of wooden construction, two stories in height on a concrete foundation, will stand on o bigh knoll, facing the lake and will be one of the handsomest summer homes ever built in this city.

The ground plan of the house is 40x60 feet, the entire property comprising about two acres including frontage on the lake shore. Among its numerous features of comfort are included a sleeping porch, three baths and two large fireplaces. Thomas & Thomas of this city are the contracting builders and H. K. Wilson & Co., of Chicago, the architects.

It is expected that the house will be ready for occupancy in the spring. E. B. Ward is making a fine macadam driveway to the house and H. D. Marshall has the contract for laying the water and lighting systems.

PAY-UP WEEK ON IN FULL BLAST

CUSTOMERS TAKING ADVANTAGE OF BARGAINS OFFERED

Many Accounts of Long Standing Have Been Canceled—Wonderful Bargains Offered.

Our taking part in National Pay-Up Week puts us all in the best of company. The man who pays up during National Pay-Up Week may be said to rate himself automatically as one of the community's best citizens. It will be readily appreciated when it is considered that no deadbeats will take part in the observance of National Pay-Up Week.

Deadbeats never participated in any kind of a pay up proposition. It is foreign to their nature to pay when it is possible to avoid it. National Pay-Up Week does not appeal to them at all, and they will not be heard from during the week of October 2nd to 7th. It is the very antithesis of their form of enjoyment.

Only those who are honest and willing to pay will respond to the patriotic impulses awakened by National Pay-Up Week. None owes much but there are so many of that class and their small individual indebtedness is no formidable a burden, it can hardly be realized by persons not familiar with credit. It is hard for such people to believe that their small accounts actually combine into a serious burden upon all enterprises.

During the present week every person in this vicinity should take enough interest in this matter to become informed about the importance of National Pay-Up Week as a factor in the upbuilding of our community prosperity. If the buyers who are able to pay but are negligent about settlement day will take hold of matters in earnest it will develop a condition which will surprise not only themselves but also every man who has given his endorsement to the local campaign.

What National Pay-Up Week has done for hundreds of other communities it can do for our community and it will do just as much for us as there is as much patriotism in this community as elsewhere and it is fully aroused into action.

Besides the above splendid features of Pay-Up Week, leading Charlevoix merchants are offering wonderful bargains in the line of household necessities. Practically every store has something special to offer. Everyone is doing their best to make the week a success. Are you one of the boosters?

HID UNDER BEDS AND IN CLOSETS

YOUNG MEN AND MAIDS GIVEN BAD SCARE

Object Lesson to Young Girls Who Persist in Tramping Streets All Hours of Night.

Four young men left town Tuesday morning, each thinking very hard and feeling very shaky. Four youthful damsells of this town are tearfully resolving hereafter to mind mama and go to bed early.

The four men, who are assistants on the U. S. survey staff atopping at the Charlevoix, took the four maids for a stroll Sunday night, sometime between the hours of nine and twelve. All of the girls, it seems, are under age, and the mother of one, becoming very much worried over the late hours her daughter had been keeping, had requested Chief of Police Howard to look after her.

Howard met the strolling party on the bridge Sunday night and singling out the girl he had been requested to watch, reprimanded her severely for being out so late an hour and taking her by the arm started her for home. The other girls did not wait to see what would happen to them but made fast time getting away from the vicinity, not even stopping to bid their escorts goodbye.

The young men by this time were beginning to get cold feet themselves and returned to their hotel intending to pack up and make a quick getaway, as in fear and trembling they expected arrest at almost any moment. Their imaginations were running riot with visions of prison bars and striped pants. Although he had no intention of making an arrest, Howard, at the request of the proprietor, who saw the chance for a little fun and a good lesson to the boys, went into the Charlevoix and called loudly for one of the culprits by name.

Then a panic ensued, each of the guilty conscienced four seeking the more completely to efface himself. Under beds and in clothes closets they lay hid, tremblingly waiting until the officer should depart. Explanations followed and it is said that loud guffaws and sounds of much merriment persisted at the hotel until a late hour in the morning.

While this thing has a funny side, let it be said that the authorities are firmly disposed to see that young girls keep off the streets after nine at night, unless accompanied by parents or older relatives. Warning first time and then reform school next, so, look out, girlies.

CHARLEVOIX HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

A mass meeting was held in the high school assembly room Friday evening. The high school students, the faculty and many of the alumni were present. All joined lustily in singing the foot ball songs and yelling. Mr. Craig gave us a splendid talk on "Being in Training." Other members of the faculty who were called upon to speak were: Miss Horst, Miss Bayes, Mr. Aseltine, Mr. Beddow and Coach Loomis. Miss Roberta Ferguson told how the girls felt about the coming game. Miss Helen Armstrong, Frank Poole, Dr. Mitchell and Mr. Bridge showed the team that the members of the alumni were with them. The wit of the evening was John Walker, who introduced the speakers and had a funny story at his tongue's end about each one. The meeting broke up with much laughter and shouting.

Tha English literature class has started Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, their new classic.

A number of cars filled with Charlevoix young people went to Boyne City to see the game Saturday.

One of Sears' boats, the Harry L., carried about 30 young people to Boyne, Saturday, to witness the game.

Boyne City won Saturday, not on their superiority in strength, but in their ability to turn all mistakes to their advantage. Boyne's interference was a strong feature of the game. Final score 12-6.

The lecture course begins October 23 with the Schuman quintet. Students tickets $1.00. Adults $1.50. Reserved seats 10 cents extra.

C. H. S. meets East Jordan on the home grounds Friday afternoon at 3:30.

Marion Center Grange.

Marion Center Grange requests the presence of all its members at the meeting on Friday. Come early, so as to be in time to attend the temperance rally to be held later in the evening at the town hall.

SCHOOL COMMISSIONER'S NOTES

Eveline, South Arm and Evangeline schools visited last week.

The teachers of Evangeline township met the afternoon of Friday the 29th at the Tainter school house.

The South Arm and Evelne teachers met at the office of the commissioner on Saturday, the 30th.

Evangeline township can boast one school almost ready for state approval. One year ago the Wildwood school was without a woodshed or water supply, had no warm cloakrooms for the boys and girls, no globe, maps or available blackboard. The visit to the school on Friday last found these things not only provided but so well planned and so well arranged that the looks and serviceability of the building are increased 100 fold. Do you wonder what plans they adopted? Then visit this little school in the forest and have the pleasure of discovery.

The Tainter school has started the solution of the water supply problem which has been troubling them for some time.

Of the Eveline and South Arm schools all but four have the approved registers and about half of the books are from the recommended list.

There are six schools in Eveline township. Of these there are three standard schools, there are four that have installed ventilating systems, four have indoor chemical toilets, five have the walls tinted in approved colors, and five have drinking fountains. Five of the six schools are at least partly supplied with single adjustable seats placed so that the teacher may secure the best possible discipline with the least possible effort.

There are four rural schools in South Arm township. There is as yet no standard school among them, one has the window lighting arrangement and amount approved by the state superintendent, there are two ventilating systems, no indoor closets, none with the walls tinted, and no adjustable seats. One has the seats correctly placed for discipline and comfort.

Most of the schools were supplied with all appendages legally necessary but in all cases a written report in detail was made to the director of the district.

The Ranney school has a splendid new cement approach.

The Rock Elm school looks fine from an outside view but you can not appreciate what they have done from the roadside. Walk in!

Sewing classes for the girls have been reported at Springvale, the German school, and at Three Bells. What for the boys, we ask?

Junior Farmers' league organized at North Wilson.

The Advance school received its standard plate in June 1915. At the annual meeting in July, 1916, they voted to build a new woodshed attached to the building at the rear and that it should be one of which they should not be ashamed. They have scored a victory in plan and in construction and they surely deserve the honor plate about which they inquire.

Eveline No. 3 installed Wolverine systems adjoining the cloakrooms which are opposite and facing the teacher's desk for direct supervision from the teacher. This district has not declared itself in line for any plate of any kind but they have seen the reason underlying state construction plans and have obtained a maximum of service from a minimum cost. The director has shown care and foresight in the selection of all school room supplies during his term of office.

Eveline No. 6 has been rather busy of late but the final outcome of their plans has not yet been decided.

Home credit work fairly booming everywhere. It's the one big thing for forming habits of thrift, of industry, and of joy in labor.

Columbus Day soon. Look up the law on patriotism.

First standard school in Michigan was the Old Mission school in Grand Traverse county, which received its plate March 11, 1914. There were one year from that date 166 standard school in Michigan. There are now 286 standard schools, 195 of which are in 15 counties. There are five standard schools in Charlevoix county.

GLYCERINE AND BARK PREVENT APPENDICITIS

The simply mixture of buckthorn bark, glycerine, etc., known as Adler-i-ka, astonishes Charlevoix people. Because Adler-i-ka acts on BOTH lower and upper bowel, ONE SPOONFUL relieves almost ANY CASE constipation, sour stomach or gas. It removes such surprising foul matter that a few doses often relieve or prevent appendicits. A short treatment helps chronic stomach trouble. The INSTANT, easy action of Adler-i-ka is astonishing. INDIAN RACE IS GOING TO LAST

INCREASE IS RAPID IN THIS COUNTRY

Cato Sells Says There Are More Than Any Time Since Bureau Was Founded.

There are more Indians in this country today than there have been at any time since the bureau of Indian affairs has been established and they are steadily increasing as a race, Cato Sells, United States commissioner on Indian affairs, announces. Mr. Sells was to leave Chicago for Washington, D. C. He has just completed a trip through many Indian reservations.

"The Indian is no longer a dying race," said Commissioner Sells. "The Indian problem has changed recently and the red man is looming up as a race which will stand and hold its own side by side with the other races of the world.

"I base my statements on the most recent census of the Indians. A vigorous health campaign among them begun three years ago has brought forth results which show what can be done and also that the race can find and will be perpetuated if the work goes on.

"There was a time when the Indian was treated without sympathy by the majority of the people. Now those who seek to exploit him are few and meet little encouragement.

Becomes a Producer of Wealth.

"The Indian is rapidly becoming a producer of wealth, instead of a mere consumer. They are no longer ration eating people, as was the case formerly. Now only those receive rations who are old, sick or blind, as are the dependents among other peoples. The others are fast becoming self-supporting.

"There are at present 350,000 Indians in 24 states, settled on 80 reservations and under the direction of 134 United States superintendencies. The children are numerous and the death rate has been reduced.

"Enforcement of sobriety is vital in connection with the Indian service. Use of intoxicants has an especially demoralizing and disastrous effect on the Indian, and the employes of the bureau, following the early stand taken upon liquor, have been careful to keep this influence away from them.

Worth About $900,000,000.

"The wealth of the Indians is about $900,000,000, and includes 60,000,000 acres of ground of various worth and quality," said Mr. Sells. "A large part of this land is grazing land, but there is much in forests, agriculture, coal, and oil fields."

Commissioner Sells explained that his visit to Chicago at this time was due to completing the sale of 34 carloads of cattle raised by Indians in Montana.

"Chicago concerns bought 24 carloads and those in Omaha 17 loads, netting in all $97,093," said he. "There is every probability that the Indian will soon become the cattle king of America, a great factor in the world's woolen market, and a large producer of horses. The Indian is a natural herdsman. He loves horses and readily adapts himself to raising cattle and sheep."

"THANK GOODNESS I CAN SLEEP AGAIN," SHE SAYS JOYOUSLY "TANLAC FIXED ME UP FINE"

"Thank goodness I can sleep again for the first time in several years. I know what it is to go off to sleep and not wake until breakfast time. People who have always been free from nervousness cannot understand just how much this means to me.

"Besides doing this for me, Tanlac has also benefited my stomach, which formerly caused me suffering. The medicine has built me up a great deal too. I can certainly highly recommend Tanlac to all who suffer as I did. I know what the remedy will do and I cannot say too much in its favor," was the statement made by Mrs. Thomas Labadie of 812 Sedwick Street, Port Huron, while talking to the Tanlac Representative.

Tanlac, the national tonic, is prepared from roots, barks, and herbs, and is nature's own remedy and has been publicly indorsed by over 250,000 people who have been relieved of stomach trouble, indigestion, accumulation of gas, nervousness, sleeplessness, rheumatism, catarrhal and kidney affections and has made them feel young and vigorous again and renewed their strength and ambition.

Tanlac can be obtained here only of B. A. Herman.

EVERY VOTER MUST REGISTER

Every voter in Charlevoix who intends to cast a ballot at the election in November must register, whether his name is already on the registration books or not.

There is a widespread misconception regarding this fact which must be borne in mind.

It should be thoroughly understood that no previous registration will qualify a voter this year. A general registration is ordered by law for the presidential election and for the county and state elections which are held with it.

No matter how many times a voter may have registered in the past, he must comply with the requirements again or he will be unable to cast a ballot on November 7.

Registration day is the Saturday before election. Only illness or being out of town will excuse a voter under the law from not placing his name on the books and these are the only excuses which will be acceptable when election day arrives if the unregistered voter wants to cast a ballot.

To let it sink in deeply, let us repeat: Every voter who intends to vote in Charlevoix in November must register.

LEADERSHIP FOR BOYS

Organizations for boys are one of the typical ideas of the times. A great army of youngsters will gather this fall in the Boy Scouts, Woodcraft League, Knights of King Arthur and so on. The Boy Scouts of America alone include 200,000 members. The time when the boy used to sit down under the evening lamp and read the Rollo books has gone by. To keep him out of the loafing hangouts, he has been turned into a young clubman.

But it's one thing to get the boys into some of the many useful societies, and it's quite another to have it work out some positive benefit. Leaders of the Boy Scout movement report great difficulty in securing "Scoutmasters." To fill this lack they are starting at Boston this fall a school for scout leadership, and receiving applications for membership from all over the country.

As things now are, many of these boy organizations run in a haphazard fashion. Very few men have the gift for work with boys. Young America is a tough problem to handle. He thinks quick. He has a very keen sense of humor. He feels a desire to utter his witticisms at the most inopportune times. His little spirit boils over with fun, and he wants to make a game of all drill or class work.

The average man has to think very actively to subdue these resourceful minds and squirming muscles. It takes an alert brain, an ingenious imagination, a tolerant spirit, and a firm will. Most men feel utterly exhausted after an evening of it.

There is great need for organizations to keep the boys off the streets and to provide outlet for their superfluous energy. A man who has a gift for this kind of leadership can do untold good. The ministers, church workers, and school teachers will have to make more of a study of this work. Probably the clergyman can exert more influence in this way than by the most exhaustive study of theology.

GOVERNMENT SURVEY HERE

U. S. Engineers Making Detailed Sectional Map of State.

F. H. Wilson and H. H. Senseney, of Washington, D. C., engineers connected with the United States Geological Survey, with their staff of assistants, who came to the Hotel Charlevoix last Friday, left Tuesday morning to take up their work in another portion of the county. They are engaged in the preliminary work of making a detailed topographical map of the state, working by sections of from 15 to 18 square miles in extent. These maps will show accurately to the conformation of the land and the exact location of buildings and other land marks and when completed will be placed on sale by the government at a low figure, for the benefit of many, who will find such a map peculiarly valuable by reason of its superiority to the ordinary map in the matter of detail.

CO. I LEAVES FRIDAY FOR MEXICAN BORDER

ACCORDING TO TELEPHONE MESSAGE FROM GRAYLING

Long Looked for Orders to Move Greeted With Cheers By Boys of National Guard.

Just as we go to press we received a long distance telephone call from Camp Ferris, Grayling, stating that Co. I and the 33rd Michigan Infantry had received orders to move to the border and would be on their way Friday. The order to move had been anticipated for sometime, and was received by the soldier boys with cheers. Months of camp life had grew so monotonous that any change was a most welcome one.

As soon as the boys reach their destination weekly letters regarding the trip and camp life will be resumed in these columns.

The New York World, which once was outspoken in its admiration for Mr. Hughes, now declares that the people do not know where Hughes stands, or what he stands for. This Wilson organ had no such criticism to make when Mr. Hughes was governor. The World said on May 17, 1910: "He dictated no nominations, controlled no convention, trafficked in no patronage, made no bargains with officeholders. He has rewarded nobody for supporting him and punished nobody for opposing him. What influence he has wielded over public opinion has come through his appeals to the voters themselves." That is the estimate of Mr. Hughes given by the World six years ago. It is a pretty fair letter of recommendation. Could the World say as much for President Wilson? Hardly, for the president has done all of the things from which the World absolved Hughes.—Kansas City Journal.

GUARDSMEN PAY THE PRICE OF WILSON'S AOASEMENT.

Having condoned the repeated murders of Americans by the Carranzistas, and having abased himself before Carranza, and having aided in placing Carranza in power, what is Mr. Wilson's reward? and who pays it? The reward is that Mr. Wilson has to place 150,000 troops on the border to partially prevent the raids and murders that his friend Mr. Carranza will not or cannot prevent; and the payment is made by the soldiers who are slain and by the families of the guardsmen who go in want because their husbands and fathers have been called to the border to make good Mr. Wilson's refusal to let the regular army administer such punishment to the bandits as to inspire in them a healthy fear.—From the speech of Col. Theodore Roosevelt, delivered at Lewiston, Maine, in behalf of Charles E. Hughes.

We are sure you will like the story of Stephen O'Mara, a poor little fatherless, motherless boy from the heart of the Big Woods. He had never seen more than three houses together in a clearing in all his young life until the call of The Land Beyond the Hills came to him. Then came the greatest joy and sorrow of his life—he met The Girl. And then—but why spoil the story?

CHAPTER I.

I Don't Mind If I Do!

THAT year no rain had fallen for a score of days in the hill country. The valley road that wound upward and still upward from the town of Morrison ran a ribbon of puffy yellow dust between sun baked, brown sodded dunes; ran north and north, a tortuous series of loops on loops, to lose itself at last in the cooler promise of the first outwork of the mountains.

Since early afternoon Caleb Hunter had been sitting almost immobile in the shade of the trellis which flanked the deep verandas of his huge white, thick pillared house on the hill above the river. It was reminiscent of another locality—the old Hunter place on the valley road.

Morrison had changed since Caleb Hunter's father topped with the white columned house that hill above the river. In those days it had been little more than a sleepy if conservatively prosperous and self sufficient community, without industry of any sort, or, it might be added, ambition or seeming need of one.

From the Hunter verandas a half dozen red roofed, brown shingled bungalows, half camps and half castles, were visible across the land stretches where the cattle had grazed before. And just beyond Caleb Hunter's own high box hedge Dexter Allison's enormous stucco and timber "summer lodge" sprawled amid a round dozen acres of green lawn and landscape gardening, its front to the river.

The fishing was still far above reproach a little farther back country, and Dexter Allison owned the sawmills that droned in the valley. His men drove his timber down from the hills in the north; his men piled the yellow planks upon his flat cars which ran in over his spur line that had crept up from the south. His hundreds and hundreds of rivermen already trod the sawdust padded streets of the newer Morrison that had sprung into being beyond the head; they swarmed in on the drives, a hard faced, hard shouldered horde, picturesque, proficient and profane. They brought with them color and care free prodigality and a capacity for abandonment to pleasure that ran the whole gamut of emotions, from raucous roared chanties to sudden, swift encounters which were as silent as they were deadly. And they spent their money without stopping to count it.

The younger generation of the older Morrison was quick to point out the virtues of this vice. And after a time, when the older generation found that the rivermen preferred their own section of the town, ignoring as though they had never existed the staid and sleepy residential streets above, they heaved a sigh of partial relief and tried to forget their proximity.

It was the hottest day of the hottest fortnight that the hill country had known in years. The very temperature gave color to Allison's statement that the heat had driven them north from the shore—him and his wife and Barbara, their daughter of ten, and the half dozen or more guests whose trunks, coming on the next day, made an even more imposing sight than had Allison's own. And, yet as he sat there in the shadow, methodically pulling upon his pipe, Caleb Hunter smiled from time to time reminiscently.

He was nodding his head drowsily when a haze of dust to the north caught his vagrant attention. Quite apparently it was raised by a foot traveler, and the latter were not frequent upon that road, especially foot travelers who came from that direction. Trivial as it was, it piqued his interest, and he lay back and followed it from lazily half closed eyes. It topped a rise and disappeared, the dust cloud, and reappeared in turn, but not until it had advanced to within a scant hundred yards of him could he make out the figure which raised it. And then, after one sharp glance, with a quick little lift of breath, he rose and went a trifle hastily out across his own lawn toward the iron picket fence that bordered the roadside. He went almost hurriedly to intercept the boy who came marching over the brow of the last low hill.

Caleb Hunter, particularly in the last year or so, had seen many a strange and brilliant costume pass along that wilderness highway, but as he hung over the front gate he remembered that none of them had ever before drawn him from his deep chair in the shadow. Far him none of them had ever approached in sensationalism the quite unbelievable garb of the boy who came steadily on and on, who came steadily nearer and nearer.

"Air—air that the—city?"

With a little closer view of him the watching man understood the reason for the dense cloud of dust above the lone pedestrian, for when the boy raised his feet with each stride the man sized hobnailed boots which incased them failed to lift in turn. Indeed, the toes did clear the ground, but the heels, slipping away from the lean ankles, dragged in the follow through. And the boy's other garments, save for his flannel shirt and flapping felt hat, were of a size in keeping with the boots.

For a time Caleb had been at a loss to make out the object which the boy carried upon one shoulder, balanced above a blanket tight rolled and tied with a strap. Not until the grotesque little figure was within a dozen paces of him did he recognize it, and then at the same moment that he caught a glimpse of an old and rusted revolver strapped to the boy's narrow waist he realized what it was. The boy was toting a double springed steel trap, big enough it seemed to take all four feet of any bear that ever walked—and it was beautifully dull with oil!

Caleb stood and stared, mouth agape. A moment or two earlier he had had to fight off an almost uncontrollable desire to roar with laughter, but that mood had passed somehow as the boy came nearer, for the latter was not even aware of his presence there behind the iron fence. He was walking with his head up, thin face thrust forward like that of a young and overly eager setter with the bird in plain sight. The world of hunger in that strained and staring visage helped Caleb to master his mirth, and when at a tentative cough from him the small figure halted dead in his tracks and wheeled even the vestige of a smile left the wide waisted watcher's lips. Then Caleb had his first full view of the boy's features.

There were wide, deep shadows beneath the gray eyes, doubly noticeable because of the heavy fringe of the lashes that swept above them; there was a pallid, bluish circle around the thin and tight set lips. And the lean cheeks were very, very pale, both with the heat of the sun and a fatigue now close to exhaustion. But the eyes themselves as they met Caleb's were alight with a fire which afterward, when he had had more time to ponder it, made him remember the pictured eyes of the children of the crusades. They fairly burned into his own, and they checked the first half jocular words of greeting which had been trembling upon his lips. His voice was only grave and kindly when he began to speak.

"You—you look a trifle tired, young man," he said then. "Are you—going far?"

The boy touched his lips delicately with the point of his tongue. His gravity more than matched that of his questioner.

"Air—air that the—city?"

The words were soft of accent and a little drawling. There was an accompanying gesture of one thumb thrown backward over a thin shoulder. But Caleb had to smile a little at the breathless note in the query.

"The city!" he echoed, a little puzzled. "The city! Well, now, I"— And he chuckled a bit.

The boy caught him up swiftly, almost sharply.

"That's—ain't that Morrison?" he demanded.

And then Caleb had a glimmer of comprehension. He nodded.

"Yes," he answered quietly, "that's the city. That's Morrison down there."

"I thought it was," he murmured, and a thread of awe wove through the words. "I thought it sat nachelly hed to be! Haow—haow many houses would you reckon they might be daown—daown in thet there holler?"

The owner of the white columned house gave the question his meed of reflection.

"Well, I—I'd say quite a few hundred at least."

The odd little figure bobbed his head.

"That's what old Tom always sed," he muttered, more to himself than to his hearer. "An'—an' I guess I ain't never rightly believed him till naow." And then, "Is—is New Yor-rk any bigger?" he asked.

The man at the picket fence smiled again, but the smile was without offense.

"Well, yes," he answered; "yes, considerably bigger, I should judge—twice as large at least, and maybe more than that."

The boy did not answer. He just faced about to stare once more. And then the miracle came to pass. Around a far bend in Dexter Allison's single spur track there came careening an asthmatic switch engine with a half dozen empty flats in tow. With a brave puffing and blowing of leaky cylinder heads, it rattled across an open space between piles of timber in the mill yard and disappeared with a shrill toot of warning for unseen workmen upon the tracks ahead. The boy froze to granite-like immobility as it flashed into view. Long after it had passed from sight he stood like a bit of a fantastic figure cut from stone. Then a tremor shook him from head to foot, and when it came slowly about Caleb saw that his small face was even whiter than it had been before beneath its coat of tan and powdery dust.

He swallowed hard and tried to speak and had to swallow again before the words would come.

"Oh, I—mey—die!" he broke out falteringly then. "There goes a injine! A steam injine, we'a't it?"

Long afterward, when he had realized that the boy's life was to bring again and again a repetition of that sublime moment of realization—a moment of fulfillment unspoiled by surfeit or sophistication or a blunted capacity to marvel, which Caleb had seen grow old and stale even in the children he knew—he wondered and wished that he might have known it himself, once at least. Years of waiting, starved years of anticipation, he felt after all must have been a very little price to pay for that great, blinding, gasping moment. But at the time, amazed at the boy's white face, amazed at the hushed fervor in the words he forgot, he spoke before he thought.

"But haven't you ever seen an engine before?" he asked.

As soon as the question had left his lips he would have given much to have had it back again. But at that it failed to have the effect which he feared too late to check. Instead of coloring with hurt and shame, instead of subterfuge or evasion, the boy simply lifted his eyes levelly to Caleb's face.

"I oin't never seed nuthin'," he stated patiently. "I ain't never seed more'n three houses together in a clearin' before. I—I ain't never been outen the timber—till today. But I nim to see more naow—before I git done!"

"The view is excellent from my veranda," said Caleb as he waved a hand behind him. "And—you look a little warm and tired. If your business is not of too pressing a nature—have you"—he broke off, amazed at his helpless formality in the matter—"have you come far?"

And he wondered immediately how the boy would receive that suggestion that he hesitate, there with the "city" in front of him, a fairy tale to be explored. And again he was allowed to catch a glimpse of age old spirit—a glimpse of a man sized self discipline—beneath the childish exterior.

The boy hesitated a moment, but it was his uncertainty as to just what Caleb's invitation had offered and not the lure of the town which made him pause. He took one step forward.

"I been comin' since last Friday," he explained. "I been comin' downn river for three days naow, and I been comin' fast!"

Again that measuring, level glance.

"An' I ain't got no business—yit," he went on. "Thet's what I aim to locate after I've hed a chance to look around a trifle. But I am tired a little, an' so if you mean thet you're askin' me to stop for a minit—if you mean thet you're askin' me that—why, then—then I guess I don't mind if I do."

"That's what I mean," said Caleb.

And the little figure preceded him across his soft, cropped lawn.

Caleb Hunter had never married, and even now at the age of forty and odd he particularly mellow moments he was liable to confess that, while matrimony no doubt offered a far wider field for both general excitement and variety, as far as he himself was concerned he felt that his bachelor condition had points of excellence too obvious to be treated with customary. Perhaps the fact that Sarah Hunter, four years his senior, had kept so well oiled the cogs of the domestic machinery of the white place on the hill that their churnings had never been evidenced may have been in part an answer to his contentment.

For Sarah Hunter, too, had never married. To the townspeople, who had never dared to try to storm the wall of her apparent frigidity or been able quite to understand her aloof austerity, she was little more than a weekly occurrence as dependable as the rising and setting of the sun itself. Every Sunday morning a rare vision of stately dignity for all her tininess, assisted by Caleb, she descended from the Hunter equipage to enter the portals of the Morrison Baptist church. After the service she reappeared and, having complimented the minister upon the sagacity of his discourse, again assisted by Caleb she mounted to the rear seat of the surrey and rolled back up the hill.

That was as much as the townspeople ever saw of Cal Hunter's maiden sister unless there happened to be a prolonged siege of sickness in the village or a worse accident than usual. Then she came and camped on the scene until the crisis was over, soft voiced, soft fingered and serenely sure of herself. Sarah had never married, and even though she had in the long interval which year by year had brought to Caleb a more placid rotundity grown slender and slenderer still and flat chested and sharp angled in face and figure Caleb knew that underneath it all there had been no shrinkage in her soul—knew that there were no bleak expanses in her heart or edges to her pity.

They often joked each other about their state of single blessedness, did Caleb and his sister. Often, hard upon his easy boast of satisfaction with things as they were, she would quote the fable of the fox and the high hanging grapes, only to be taunted a moment later with her own celibacy. But the taunt and the fable had long been stingless. For Sarah Hunter knew that one end of Caleb's heavy gold watch chain still carried a bit of a gold coin worn smooth and thin from years of handling; she knew that the single word across its back; even though it had long ago been effaced so far as other eyes were concerned, was still there for him to see. And Caleb, rummaging one day for some lost article or other in a pigeonhole in Sarah's desk, in which he had no license to look, had come across a picture of a tall and black haired lad brave in white trousers and an amazing waistcoat. Caleb remembered having been told that he had died for another with that same smile which the picture had preserved—the tall and jaunty youngster. And so their comprehension was mutual. They understood, did Caleb and his sister.

But sure as he was of Sarah's fundamental kindness Caleb experienced a twinge of guilty uncertainty that August afternoon as he closed the iron gate behind the grotesque little figure which had already started across his lawn. For the moment he had forgotten that the sun was low in the west. He had overlooked the fact that it was customary for the Hunter establishment to sup early during the warm summer months. But when he turned to find Sarah watching, stiff and uncompromising, from the doorway he remembered with painful certainty her attitude toward his propensity to pick up any stray that might catch him in a moment of too pronounced mellowness—stray human or feline or lost yellow dog.

"Supper ta served, Cal," she drawled in her gentle, almost lisping, voice.

Caleb received the statement as if it were an astounding bit of hitherto undreamed of news.

"Comin', Sarah!" he chirped briskly. "Comin' this blessed minute!"

VAN PELT'S TOURING DIARY

Trip No. 1

Fourth Day Out

Sunday, September 17, 1916, was spent in a concreto city—Detroit, in a concrete fashion. A ride on a conereto street or road is conereteely concrete in its adaptability to insure freedom from bumps and slumps. A concreto road around Pine lake will insure hundreds of cars and thousands of visitors for Charlevoix county, only we do not want to make the samo mistake they made by placing the expansion joints straight across the road. Remember this, Hammond, Hipp, and House (three H's, by Jiminy, and they are all good, too). Make us a 16 foot concrete road with expansion joints the entire length of the road in the middle and then on either side, about every 40 feet, place the joints on an angle of about five degrees. This will cause any spreading to go to the outside and do away with any ridges in the road.

Monday night, we put the steamship, "City of Cleveland" (a most magnificent boat) in our old dump of a car and drew it across Lake Erie to Buffalo. Then they took the boat off and we motored around there and brought up at Hamburg, the home of one of my nephews and spent Tuesday. Wednesday, we were on our way to Rochester, the most beautiful city in the United States, where flour, kodaks, shoes, etc., are made in abundance. We made this trip, 78 miles, in two and a fifth hours, on good roads, brick, concrete and oiled macadam. Here we are, waiting to get our car repaired, having used ten gallons of oil in 450 miles to Detroit. The ship furnished the oil from Detroit to Buffalo.

Thursday, September 26, 1916, off for Syracuse. Arrived at 4 p. m., 90 miles. Good roads. Met about 350 cars, mostly $1,000 to $5,000 cars. New Fords. Followed a race between a skinny Ford and a big car for a couple of miles, and the Ford kept ahead. The most cars we meet are the big farm trucks, carrying 100 to 120 boxes of apples to a load. Roads smooth and fruit comes in good condition—quick delivery every day in the year. Many farms have a row of big apple trees on the sides of the road. Land $200 to $350 per acre. Fine big homes and immense barns and three or four silos. Some pieces of the road are brought up to a crown in the center like the stretch to Petoskey. Where there are no apple or fruit trees, there are big old elms. The country is very beautiful and rolling. It is a question which is the best place to stop—the Seneca at Rochester or the Onondaga here. Both are fine. No frost here as yet and farmers are cutting corn with a machine. I see no reason why Charlevoix county should not in time become just as fine as this and this is considered the real garden of the United States for fruit and farming and the cities are rich, very rich in manufacturing. But they can't beat Charlevoix. All we want is the roads and then we'll make for 'em.

Yours,

GEORGE H. VAN PELT.

SIGNS OF DANGER

That Should Be Heeded by Charlevoix People.

There's serious danger in neglecting any weakness of the kidneys. The warning that Nature gives should not be overlooked. If troubled by too frequent passage of the kidney secretions; burning or scalding; if the secretions are highly colored and contain sediment when left standing—if you have backache, too, with frequent headaches and dizziness, make up your mind that your kidneys are affected and begin using some reliable kidney remedy. Deaths from kidney disease have increased in the United States alone, 72 per cent in the last 20 years. The risk is great—you can't afford to delay. Charlevoix people recommend Doan's Kidney Pills. Can you ask for better proof of merit than the statement of this Charlevoix resident?

Mrs. R. M. McKeel, 214 Mason St., Charlevoix, says: "I had been troubled for several months by kidney disease. My body bloated quite badly and I had a weak back and severe pains in my kidneys. My rest was broken at night. I finally got Doan's Kidney Pills at the Ivy Drug store and they gave me relief in every way."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. McKeel had. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN HAPPENINGS

Events of Interest to Courier Readers

Mackinaw Man in Strange Story.

The Saginaw News says: William T. Hall, 318 North Warren avenue, has just returned from a visit during which he saw his 32-year-old son for the first time. For years both of them have believed the other dead, and it was little more than pure luck which finally led to the reunion this summer of the father with his son and his wife who he finds is also living.

According to the story which Mr. Hall told the News, Monday, he was at the time of the separation a soldier stationed at the post at Mackinac Island. He was ordered to Texas and on his departure left behind his wife, whom he had married at the post. Two months after his departure his son, Wallace, was born.

Mr. Hall was discharged in Texas and for some time was unable to return home. On his arrival at Mackinac, however, he discovered that his wife had received notice from Washington that he was dead and had remarried.

Hall heard nothing more of his family until last summer, when a friend who was visiting on Mackinac Island happened to discover the son and told him of his father's whereabouts. Young Hall immediately came to Saginaw and took his father back with him for a visit. Mrs. Hall's second husband had died and the family were finally reunited. Mr. Hall has returned to Saginaw for a short time, but says he intends soon to go to Mackinac to make his home with his family.

Veteran Applies for Pension.

Michael Cadrow was a fisherman at Mackinac when the Civil war broke out. The day after the firing on Ft. Sumpter, he set out by boat for Detroit to enlist. At the close of the war his clothes were received by his mother at Mackinac Island and until last week she and other relatives believed him dead. Although he served all through the Civil war and is 70 years old he never made application for a pension until now when he was entering the Michigan Soldier's Home. A Grand Rapids paper carried a story about his application for a pension and in this way the family learned he was alive.

Will Employ More Men.

Word came Thursday, of last week, from A. A. Wheat, general manager of the Wheat Paper company, of Elkhart, Indiana, to A. B. Mudgett, manager of the Petoskey paper mill, owned and operated by that firm, to immediately secure the necessary machinery and stock for the increasing of the output of the pulp mill of the Petoskey paper mill at least 50 per cent.

This means that from 30 to 40 more men will be employed at the paper mill as soon as the machinery is installed, probably in about 60 days, and that the monthly payroll will be increased from $1,500 to $2,000.

This will be considerable help here during the winter season when work is not as brisk as in the summer, spring and fall. With 40 more men finding work at home 40 more men will keep their families here and spend their money here.

This is not all for the increase in production means at least 50 per cent more paper stock must be purchased from the farmers and land owners of this section, an additional outlay of about $2,500 a month over what is now being paid out for stock.

Making Salt.

Great improvements have been made in the methods of making high grade salt both by the grainer and vacuum pan processes. The mechanical grainers in which the brine enters the plant and is not touched by human hands until it is almost ready for shipment are marvels of ingenuity. Fine table salt is now made almost exclusively by vacuum pan processes. These evaporators have so greatly reduced the cost of making fine salt that the old time methods long ago passed into history.

Old rags are used in making imitation leather.

Card of Thanks

I wish to thank all those who ordered furnaces last week, also those who read my ad. It is some job to write an ad, and I always feel good when I am sure that it has been read. I also wish to state that I may have to discontinue the sale of PENINSULAR FURNACES as the coal dealers are making such a fuss. They all claim the sale of a Peninsular Furnace cuts down their output. However. I am determined to sell a few more, so get your order in quick if you need a furnace. Hoping you haven't got a furnace I beg to remain.

Political Jottings.

The Houston Post reasons that it was easier for its own beloved Democracy to endorse the President's Mexican policy than to define it.

While he was about it Senator James Hamilton Lewis also might have explained that the Rome that was "too proud to fight" died a rather disastrous death.

"In all fairness," asks the Boston Transcript, "shouldn't the expense of financing Carranza be borne by the Democratic campaign committee?"

Democrats really haven't any objection to big appropriations for army and navy and internal improvements. They expect the Republicans to rustle the revenue to foot the bills for the next four years.

Hughes says he would like six months to investigate the Administration, but the Administration figures he's doing very well as it is.

Yes, and the same policies that have filled Judge Hughes and others with "a deep sense of shame," have sent many other Americans to their graves.

The President has changed his mind about sending more troops to the border, thus running true to form.

When Tom Taggart talks economy to them, it is time the Democrats stopped their extravagance.

The Hughes smile is beginning to attract favorable attention.

President Entertains Five Progressives.—Headline. Others he simply amuses.

Democratic papers chide Hughes because he says he is "100 per cent. a candidate." The Wilson papers naturally prefer a fifty-fifty candidate.

The President says he has no interest in any political party, "except as an instrument of achievement." If that's it, then how did he happen to select such a poor instrument as the Democratic party?

Carranza isn't a candidate for President of the United States, but he did more for American preparedness in three weeks than Woodrow Wilson did in three years.

Another thing you never hear of since the Democrats reduced the cost of living is the "baker's dozen."

Mr. Hughes is criticized for his frequent use of the word "Now." Evidently his immediateness is worrying the watchful waiters who put things off until tomorrow.

Families living in rural districts where mail service has been curtailed will be interested in knowing that Postmaster General Burleson has sent Secretary McAdoo a check for $5,200,000, representing surplus postal revenues.

Mr. Garner should not quote what Mr. Wilson said while president of Princeton. His utterances are outlawed by himself in seven days.

That man Hughes is causing the Democratic newspapers an endless amount of worry. Apparently they will never be satisfied until he turns the management of his campaign over to them.

Mr. Hughes' speeches are giving poor satisfaction to the Democratic press, which proves they are very good speeches, indeed.

Secretary Baker is developing an agility in changing his mind that must endear him to his discoverer.

Mr. Wilson's Administration must confess itself incompetent in one respect or the other. It either has appropriated for an unneeded navy or it has neglected a needed navy. It can select its fault to suit itself. In one respect or the other it must be wrong.

"I believe in efficiency in politics just as much as in anything else," says Mr. Hughes. Efficiency is an excellent watch-word, and its use in the campaign is merely a forerunner of its use in the White House when he gets there.

First they said that Hughes was an iceberg, now they are saying that he is a mud-slinger. He cannot possibly be both, and as a matter of fact, is neither. The Democrats must feel in a mighty bad way when they cry out "mud and treason."

WILSON ADMITS HE PRECIPITATED WAR

When Mr. Wilson forgets himself he admits that we have been at war; for example, on May 11, 1914, in an address over the dead marines at the navy yard in Brooklyn, he said that the marines had been engaged in "a war of service." A war of service to whom or to what? Certainly not to the United States; nor to Mexico; nor to humanity at large. Was it to Mr. Wilson?—From the speech of Col. Theodore Roosevelt, delivered at Lewiston, Maine, in behalf of Charles E. Hughes.

FIRE BLIGHT ON FRUIT TREES

MANY NEAR-BY ORCHARDS ARE AFFECTED

Disease One of Most Serious Enemies of All Fruits—What Should Be Done.

Undoubtedly many of the readers of this article have noticed in their own or neighbors' apple or pear trees, short branches on which the leaves look scorched and killed. I have noticed it in many of the trees in the gardens of this city, and I have had several requests for information in regard to it.

This condition is due to a disease known variously as the Fire Blight, Pear Blight and Apple Blight which has come to be recognized as one of the most serious enemies of these fruits. It is a bacterial disease, gaining entrance to the tree through wounds or through the flowers. The germs are carried by insects to the flower. The insects are attracted by the dark, mucilinginous fluid that oozes out of the diseased wood in the spring and which is swimming with bacteria. From the flowers and other centers of infection the disease spreads through the whole plant.

When it appears the best treatment is to remove and burn the infected parts, cutting from 12 to 18 inches below where the disease appears. The disease may be carried in pruning implements from a diseased to a healthy tree. Therefore, the best plan is to disinfect the pruning tools after each cut with kresol carbolic acid, formaldehyde or some other good disinfectant. If each large cut is also painted with this, it will help to check the disease.

Says Drink Water If You Wish To Grow Fat And Plump

THIN MEN AND WOMEN

Do You Want to Get Fat and Be Strong?

The trouble with most thin folks who wish to gain weight is that they insist on drugging their stomach or stuffing it with greasy foods; rubbing on useless "flesh creams," or following some foolish physical culture stunt, while the real cause of thinness goes untouched. You cannot get fat until your digestive tract properly assimilates the food you eat. Drink a glass of cold water four or five times a day and take the following preparation known to reliable druggists almost everywhere, which seemingly embodies the missing elements needed by the digestive organs to help them convert food into rich, fat-laden blood. This preparation is called tonoline, and much remarkable testimony is given as to its successful use in flesh building. Tonoline which comes in the form of a small, non-injurious tablet, taken at meals and mixed with the digesting food, tends to prepare fat, flesh and muscle building elements so that the blood can readily accept and carry them to the starved portion of the body. You can readily picture the transformation that additional and previously lacking flesh making material should bring to your cheeks, filling out hollows about your neck, shoulders and bust disappearing, and your taking on from 15 to 30 pounds of solid healthy flesh. Tonoline is harmless, inexpensive, efficient. All druggists have it and are authorized to refund your money if weight increase is not obtained as per the guarantee found in each large package.

Caution:—Tonoline is recommended only as a flesh builder and while excellent results in cases of nervous indigestion, etc., have been reported, care should be taken about using it unless a gain of weight is desired.

OUR AIR WILL NOT FAIL US.

No Need to Fear That the Nitrogen Will Ever Be Exhausted.

A student at the University of Washington, having read about making nitrogen from the air, entered the chemistry department and asked the professors there what would happen when all the nitrogen had been taken out of the air. The University of Washington News-Letter says that this is what they told him:

"The atmosphere over a square mile of land is estimated to contain 20,000,000 tons of nitrogen, which is enough to furnish all the world would require for fifty years at the present rate of consumption. Even if that were not so, there would be no danger, for there's a sort of 'dust to dust' process involved that is a safeguard in itself.

"Nitrates when they go into the soil are taken up by the roots of plants and utilized. After the plant decays the nitrogen is given off, and it returns again to the atmosphere.

"If employed in the manufacture of explosives, when the charge is exploded part of the nitrate returns to the air as gas, while some goes into solution, falls to the earth and is taken up by the plants, returning later to the air."

REQUIREMENTS OF NEW BASKET LAW

WHICH BECOMES EFFECTIVE FIRST OF NOVEMBER

What Constitutes a Standard Basket and Provisions of Law Regulating the Same.

Standards for Climax baskets for grapes, other fruits and vegetables, and other types of baskets and containers used for small fruits, berries and vegetables in interstate commerce, are fixed by an act approved by the president August 31, 1916. The law will become effective November 1, 1917.

The effect of the act will be to require the use of the standards in manufacturing, sale or shipment for all interstate commerce, whether the containers are filled or unfilled. A large part of the traffic in fruits and vegetables in this country enters interstate commerce. The law relates only to the containers and will not affect local regulations in regard to heaped measure or other method of filling. A special exemption from the operations of the law is made for all containers intended for export to foreign countries, and when such containers accord with the specifications of the foreign purchasers or comply with the laws of the country to which the shipment is destined.

Standards of three capacities are fixed for Climax baskets—2, 4 and 12 quarts, dry measure. These containers, often known as "grape baskets," have relatively narrow, flat bottoms, rounded at each end, and thin sides flaring slightly from the perpendicular. The handle is bowed over at the middle from side to side. In addition to fixing the capacities of these standard baskets of this type, the law also prescribes their dimensions.

The other standards are for "baskets or other containers for small fruits, berries and vegetables." They are to have capacities only of one-half pint, one pint, one quart, or multiples of one quart, dry measure. Such containers may be of any shape so long as their capacities accurately accord with the standard requirements.

The examination and test of containers to determine whether they comply with the provisions of the act are made duties of the department, and the secretary of agriculture is empowered to establish and promulgate rules and regulations allowing such reasonable tolerances and variations as may be found necessary.

Penalties are provided by the act for the manufacture for shipment, sale for shipment, or shipment in interstate commerce of Climax baskets, and containers for small fruits, berries and vegetables not in accord with the standards. It is provided, however:

"That no dealer shall be prosecuted under the provisions of this act when he can establish a guaranty signed by the manufacturer, wholesaler, jobber or other party residing within the United States from whom such Climax baskets, baskets or other containers, as defined in this act, were purchased, to the effect that said Climax baskets, baskets or other containers are correct within the meaning of this act. Said guaranty, to afford protection, shall contain the name and address of the party or parties making the sale of Climax baskets, baskets or other containers, to such dealer, and in such case said party or parties shall be amendable to the prosecutions, fines and other penalties which would attach in due course to the dealer under the provisions of this act."

Says a Glass of Hot Water Every Morning Before Breakfast Will Take Off Fat If You Get More Fresh Air

Be Moderate in Your Diet and Reduce Your Weight with Tassco

Lack of fresh air weakens the oxygen-carrying power of the blood, the liver becomes sluggish, fat accumulates and the action of many of the vital nrgans are hindered thereby. The heart action becomes weak, work is an effort and the beauty of the figure is destroyed.

Fat put on by indoor life is unhealthy and if nature is not assisted in throwing it off by increasing the oxygen-carrying power of the blood, a scrious ease of obesity may result.

When you feel that you are getting too stout, take tbe matter in hand at once. Don't wait until your figure has hecome a joke and your health ruined through carrying around a burden of unsightly and unhealthy fat.

Spend as much time as you possibly can in the open air; hreatho deeply and get from any druggist a box of tassco, take a glass of hot water every morning before hreakfast then take tassco after each meal and at bedtime.

Weigh yourself every few days and keep up the treatment until you are down to normal. Tassco is absolutely harmless, is pleasant to take, helps the digestion and is designed to increase the oxygen-carrying power of the hlood.

Even a few days' treatment should show a noticeable reduction in weight. There is nothing hetter for obesity. 34t4

A Distinctive Reason

What is the chief reason for the superiority of Royal Baking Powder?

There are several good reasons, but there is one which distinguishes Royal from other baking powders.

This reason, which every woman should know, is that Royal Baking Powder is made from cream of tartar, which comes from grapes. This means a healthful fruit origin. It means natural food as distinguished from mineral substitutes used in other baking powders.

There is no alum nor phosphate in Royal Baking Powder

Made Good on Questionable Statement Made to His Neighbor.

A farmer living near Ironton boasted of being the earliest riser in his neighborhood. "I'm always up before three in the morning," he told his neighbor. The second farmer said he was always up before that and had part of his chores done. The first farmer thought that his neighbor was a member of the Ananias club and decided to do a little investigating on his own account. A few morning later he got up at two o'clock and went to his neighbor's house. He rapped on the back door and the woman of the house opened it. "Where is your husband?" ask the farmer, expecting to find that his neighbor was still in bed. "He was around here early in the morning, but I don't know where he is now."

The Shillalah.

The shillalah is no raw limb of a tree. It is almost as much a work of art as a well balanced cricket bat. The old shillalahs were as carefully looked after by their loving owners as a rifle in the wilds. Cut from the sturdiest of young blackthorns and showing as little taper as an ebony ruler, it was weighted with lead or iron at the end nearest the grip so that its center of gravity was about four-fifths of the way from the hitting end. When properly seasoned by being kept in the neighborhood of the farm oven for a few months it became a thing of supple steel. And the proper pronunciation of the name of this fearsome weapon is the melodious one of "shillnily," with the accent on the "all."—London Mirror.

MAYNE LOSES IN JUSTICE FIGHT

GRANT FELLOWS CHOICE OF THE CONVENTION

Local Candidate Made a Strong Run But Was Unable to Overcome Fellows' Lead.

The following ticket was nominated Thursday afternoon of last week at the Republican state convention at Saginaw:

For justice of supreme court—Grant Fellows, Hudson.

For attorney general—Alex G. Groesbeck, Detroit.

For auditor general—O. B. Fuller, Escanaba.

For state treasurer—Samuel Odell, Shelby.

For secretary of state—Coleman C. Vaughn, St. Johns.

There was only one fight in the whole convention and that was for justice of the supreme court in which Grant Fellows, attorney general of Michigan, was the winner.

Judge Frederick W. Mayne, of Charlevoix, made a strong run, having the support of more counties than any other candidate, but the large vote of the more populous southern counties gave Mr. Fellows a lead which could not be overcome.

Governor Frank B. Willis, of Ohio, gave what probably was the greatest Republican speech in the history of Michigan. He came into the convention late and spoke more than an hour while the delegates, ordinarily feverish to get at the work of nominating and to start on their way home, not only waited in patience but pleaded with him to continue.

The Traverse City Record-Eagle, under the caption of "Ignored Again," comments on the situation as follows:

"Northern Michigan does not seem to stand well with the fellows who pick out the candidates on the Republican state ticket, a fact that was again demonstrated at the convention held at Saginaw, Thursday. Judge Mayne failed to get the nomination for supreme court judge although he had enough assurances from political leaders in the state to insure him landing the nomination. He also had the best argument for his nomination in the fact that he represented a vast number of counties that have not had for a long time any recognition from the party in the state. Attorney General Grant Fellows received the nomination notwithstanding the fact that he comes from a county that already has one representative on the supreme bench of the state in the person of Justice John Bird, of Adrian, who like Fellows never had any experience on a judicial bench in his life until he was elected to the state supreme court. None of the nominess on the state ticket chosen at the convention at Saginaw live in the northern part of the state below the straits, which is still further proof of the fact that the counties that have been ignored in making up the ticket are the ones that have always been in the habit of rolling up the Republican majorities that always elects the Republican state ticket. There is nothing fair about the way in which the state offices are being distributed and it is a question as to whether or not the Republicans in this part of the state are going to continue to do the voting while the politicians from the southern and doubtful counties continue to parcel out the states offices as they see fit. Political fairness demanded that the judgeship nomination go to Judge Mayne but the party leaders ignored this claim and appropriated all the offices for the territory below the dead line which cuts off the larger part of the lower peninsula which is considered safe without apportioning any offices there. It is a bad condition and one which the Republicans in this section of the state should consider in all fairness to these northern counties. The result of the convention shows that the politician knew his business when he said that the northern counties are supposed to do the voting while the southern counties will look out for the offices."

REST ROOM FOR LADIES

Save That $45.00

The average family of five consumes five barrels of flour per year, or one barrel per year per member, according to government statistics.

Average cost of 196 pounds of IRON DUKE FLOUR, period of three years	$7.60
Average cost of 29 quarts milk	2.32
Average cost of 58 yeast cakes	.87
Average cost of 7 pounds sugar	.56
Average cost of 7 pounds lard	.88
Average cost 58 cups mashed potatoes	.23
Average cost fuel, 29 quarts water and 5 pounds salt	1.51
Total cost of baking one barrel of IRON DUKE FLOUR into bread	$13.97

The above ingredients sometimes sell for a little more, sometimes a little less but the figures are a high average. Just at present prices are higher, this however does not alter the values comparatively.

This formula will produce 383 thirteen ounce loaves of delicious home bread.

You pay 5c per loaf for each 13 ounce loaf of bakers bread, consequently 383 loaves of the boughten article cost you $19.15, or $5.18 more.

These 383 loaves of home made bread contain 29 quarts or 7¼ gallons of sweet milk worth at 8c per quart, $2.32. Most bakers bread contains water.

By planning to make your bread when the range is being used for heating or other cooking the cost of the fuel can at least be divided.

On the farm the cost of milk and potatoes is less than shown here.

Home made bread is better quality, better flavor, more healthful, more wholesome, more nutritious especially when made from IRON DUKE.

Home made bread does not dry out as quickly, does not become stale so soon, lasts longer, goes further.

Also there is the satisfaction of making your own bread, of hearing the family express their delight over its goodness.

Thus you have saved certainly $5.18. Probably $2.32, and all or at least part of $1.60, making a total of $9.10 on every barrel, either in cash or added nourishment, or

$45 a year on Family of 5

IRON DUKE flour is for sale at all grocers.

AMENDMENTS TO CONSTITUTION

FOUR TO BE VOTED UPON NOVEMBER 7

Vota No On Local Option Big Frame Up By Liquor Man to Repeal Present Local Option.

Four amendments to the state constitution and one referendum will be voted upon November 7.

The first and most important amendment is that known as

State Wide Prohibition

On petition of a sufficient number of the qualified voters of the state the following amendment to the state constitution is to be submitted.

Sec. 11. The manufacture, sale, keeping for sale, giving away, bartering or furnishing of any vinous, malt, brewed, fermented, spiritous or intoxicating liquors, except for medicinal, mechanical, chemical, scientific or sacramental purposes shall be after April 30th, 1918, prohibited in the state forever. The legislature shall by law provide regulations for the salo of such liquors for medicinal, mechanical, chemical, scientific and sacramental purposes.

A vote "Yes" on this amendment is a vote to prohibit the liquor business in Michigan after April 30, 1918. Vote "Yes."

Smaller Unit or So-Called Home Rule.

The next amendment is one framed BY the LIQUOR DEALERS and for the express purpose of repealing the present local option law and making null and void if possible, the state-wide law if it should be adopted.

Liquor Dealers' Amendmant.

This liquor dealers' amendment reads as follows:

Sec. 30. Every incorporated city every incorporated village and every organized township (menning thereby all that part of a township outside the limits of an incorporated city or village located partly or wholly therein) shall each have the right to determine by a majority vote of the electors thereof, whether or not there shall be prohibited therein the manufacture and sale of malt, brewed, fermented, vinious, distilled or intoxicating liquors.

Appropriate legislation shall be enacted to enforce and make effective the provisions of this section and, until such legislntion is enacted, existing local option and regulatory laws on this subject shall continue in force; but no existing law inconsistent with the provisions of this section shall continue in force after January 1, 1919."

This nmendment menns if passed

1st. The repeal of county local option after Jnnuary 1, 1919.

2nd. Absolute free whiskey unless the legislature passed the neceasary laws to give this whiskeyitc amendment effect.

3rd. If the legislature passes such laws the existence of hell holes for unrestricted debauch in every county in tho state, because there are few if any counties where a SINGLE city, village or township cannot be found which can be induced to vote "wet." How woald you like to live in SUCH wet town or township?

This is a dangerous amendment. It sails under false colors. It assumes to be a "prohibition" amendment, but it is gotten up by the liquor denlers' attorneys.

The next amendment is one voted on at n previous election but we suspect not fully understood. Ita purpose is to permit fraternal benefit insurance to be written by societies which do not have n ritual or lodge system. It also contains n referendum and recall system for the protection of members. The history of frsternal inaurance orders in Michigan is wreck strewn. Thousands upon thousands have heen induced to enter these societies only in their old age to find that either the mismanagement or the profligacy of their offieers have made it necessary to raise their annual premiums to a prohibitive rate and in their old age tbey have found that they had no protection for their families. Thia amendment, will, wo believe, help to cure this condition. Vote "Yes."

In other words vote "Yes" on every amendment except the Liquor Dealers' smaller unit so-called Home Rule amendment and on this vote NO.

BUM STEERING GEAR CAUSE OF ACCIDENTS

Maxwell Touring Car and a Cranky "Henry" In Mix-Up On Petoskey Road.

An accident that might easily have proved fatal occurred Sunday morning, about nine o'clock, when a Ford car owned by out of town parties, names unknown, and a Maxwell car belonging to Jake Strong, of East Jordan, were ditched on the Petoskey road, just below John Martin's place and across the railroad track, on a steep grade.

Tbe Ford was coming from Petoskey down the grade, the Maxwell from the other direction. Wben about 15 or 20 feet apart the Ford, the steering gear of which had been twisted a short time before, dropped into a chuck hole and swerved towards the Maxwell. The driver of the Maxwell swung sharply to the right to avoid the impending collision and going over the edge of the road toppled completely upside down into the ditch, pinning the three occupants underneath. The back of the tonneau fortunately struck the trunk of a fallen tree that lay across the ditch and thus saved one of the women from certain instant death.

The Ford driver, nlao losing control of his machine, went into the ditch on the other side of the road smashing the radiator and bending the rear axle. The Maxwell suffered a crushed top, bent fenders and a smashed windshield. One of the women who was badly bruised was taken on to Levering in another car.

GENERAL REVISION OF CHARTER

PROPOSITION TO BE VOTED UPON NOVEMBER 7

Council Passes Resolution Creating Park Commission—Other Work of City Council.

Among other matters considered and acted upon by the common council at their regular session last Monday evening was the question relative to a general revision of the charter on the election of seven charter members to be submitted to the people at the election on the 7th day of November. Each ward is entitled to one member on the commission and there are four elected at large in the whole city, making seven in all. These will be elected at the same time the people vote on the question of whether or not they will revise the charter. If the question to revise the charter is rejected, then their election is void. If it is adopted, then they meet within two weeks after the election and proceed to revise the charter.

The council has fixed their compensation at one dollar a day each for eight hours per day service and the commission cannot draw pay for longer than 90 days and must hold all their meetings in the firemen's hall, adjoining the court house. It was not deemed feasible to have the commission occupy the council room, as, in the report of the auditor who last audited the city books, he stated that the city clerk's office should have more help as there was more work than one man could do, so that it would be impossible to have the commission meeting there for a great number of days.

There is nothing in the resolution, or in the petition of the people who ask for this election, stating that a city manager would be employed, or that the commission form of government would be advocated. It is only n question of revising the charter, without stating why it should be revised, or in what way.

The council also passed a resolution for the creation of a park commission, to be voted on as an nmendment to the present city charter, to consist of three freeholders and they are to be elected by the people and to have the absolute control of all the city parks and grounds and to expend whatever money the common council appropriate and to always have for each year at least $300 for parks. At their meeting, to be held the 16th day of October, the council will pass the encessary resolutions to provide for an amendment to the present charter, allowing the council to create a fund and expend money for the purpose of advertising the advantages of the city of Charlevoix and to encourage people to come here to reside.

Both these amendments—one for the creation of the park commission and the other, for creating a fund for advertising purposes, must lie on the table for 30 days and thea be submitted to the governor of the state of Michigan for his npproval. After he has returned them to the city clerk, either with or without his approval, they are then submitted to a vote of the people.

It waa not deemed advisable to vote on these two propositiona at the coming election, for the reason that, as it is, there will be seven ballots to be voted and this would require two more, and, for the further reason that sbould a general revision of the city charter be made a vote on these two particular amendments would be of no use, as the charter commission could strike them out if they saw fit. Should the proposition to revise the charter be rejected, then these two amendments can be voted on at the general primary, to be held in the spring of 1917, prior to the election in April, in plenty of time for the coming season.

The street committee was also instructed to fill in the little parkings on State street and seed them down so that next year they will be covered with grass.

Apropos of the approaching wet and dry contest, it might be well here to give a short synopsis of the law now in effect governing the appointment of challengers at the polling places, close attention to which may avoid serious trouble and confusion.

Any political party, or, any organization or committee interested in the adoption or defeat of any proposition to be voted on at the coming election, has the right to appoint aot to exceed two (2) challengers, who have the privilego of having a position inside the polling place, adjoining the inspectors, where they can see everyone who offers to vote. However, any organization or committee of citizens, other than a political party, intending to appoint challengers at this election, must file with the city clerk, not less than 10 nor more than 20 days before the election tbeir intention to appoint such challengers and must set forth their reasons for appointing challengers, with a facsimile of the card to be used, which shall be signed and sworn to by some officer of the committee and aay person who files such statement with the clerk in behalf of such organization or committee, who haa no authority so to do, shall be deemed guilty of a felony and liable to a fine not to exceed $1,000 or imprisonment in a state prison not exceeding two years.

GET INCREASE IN PENSIONS

UNDER PROVISIONS RECENTLY PASSED ASHBROOK LAW.

Several Charlevoix Women Benefitted to Extent of $8.00 a Month —Law Now In Effect.

A number of Charlevoix women who are widows of war veterans will receive an increased pension under the Ashbrook law, which was passed recently by congress and which is now in effect.

Now Receive $20.

Widows of veterans of tha Civil war, the Mexican war and the war of 1812, have their pensions raised from $12 to $20 a month, under the new act. The increase means about $336,000 a year more to Michigan.

This is the second increase in pensions that has been granted. On April 19, 1890, the pensions were increased from $8 a month to $12. Most of the women effected are Civil war veterans.

Place Restrictions.

If married after the Civil war, widows must be more than 70 years old to be entitled to the pension. If married before or during the Civil war age makes no difference.

If a widow marries her pension stops, but under the new law payments are resumed if her second husband dies or if she obtains a divoree from him. If he obtains a divoree from her, the pension is restored.

Saltzgebar Writes Letter.

The following letter has been received in answer to inquiries by Charlevoix people from S. M. Saltzgeber, United States commissioner of pensions:

"In response to your recent favor you are advised that if a person is pensioned as the widow of a soldier, sailor, or marine, who served in the Civil war, and who was his lawful wife during the period of his service in said war, or as the widow of a soldier, sailor, or marine, who served in the Civil war, the war with Mexico, or the war of 1812, and who has reached the age of 70 years she should if she has not already done so write a letter to the commissioner of pensions, being careful to state in same correctly her pension certificate number the name and service of the soldier, sailor, or marine, the exact date of her birth, the place of her birth, her name as it appears in her pension certificate and her present post office address in full. No further formal application is necessary to secure the benefits of the increase of pension granted by the first section of the Act approved by the president September 8, 1916.

"If the evidence in her pension case shows that she is entitled to the increase of pension provided by this legislation, the bureau will as soon as possible grant an increase. If further evidence be necessary, a call will be issued. No claim agent or attorney will be recognized in connection with this matter.

Must File Application.

"In order to obtain pension or renewal of pension under the second section of the Act of Congress approved September 8, 1916, a remarried widow who desires to claim the benefits of said section must file a formal application in this bureau.

"If a widow desires to claim pension under the third section of tha Act which gives a widow, as described in section 2 of the Act approval April 19, 1909, title to apply for pension if she married soldier or sailor prior to June 27, 1905, it will be necessary for her to file a formal application in this bureau, claiming the benefits granted by that section.

OLDER BUT STRONGER

To be healthy at seventy, prepare at forty, is sound advice, because in the strength of middle life we too often forget that neglected colds, or careless treatment of slight aches and pains, simply undermine strength and bring chronic weakness for later years.

To be stronger when older, keep your blood pure and rich and active with the strength-building and blood-nourishing properties of Scott's Emulsion which is a food, a tonic and a medicine to keep your blood rich, alleviate rheumatism and avoid sickness. No alcohol in Scott's.

CHARLEVOIX HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

The juniors gave a class party at the home of Benona Bartlett last Wednesday evening. Dancing and candy were in abundance until about 8:15, when seven seniors entered through the back door ostensibly to enjoy the dancing. Owing to the lack of foresight by the committee on refreshments, they were asked kindly to leave; but this did not annoy them in the least. The floor was cleared immediately and the seniors had the dance to themselves, while three members of the junior class went to arouse the police department. When they arrived the place was devoid of seniors, but the terrified juniors clung timorously to the valiant minions of the law until it was definitely ascertained that the seven invaders had departed. Thus the entire junior class rid themselves of seven whole seniors. Among those present were Mr. Loomis and R. Gabe Finucan. Mr. Jack Supernaw escorted Miss Hazel Allen home.

The sophomore class are reading Silas Marner by George Elliot.

The following poem which appeared on the bulletin board, nearly caused a class riot:

Our Senior class is far-sighted,
Our nerve it can never be blighted;
We go to a party,
And eat just as hearty,
As tho' we'd been really invited.

"Beautiful women can never love." (For particulars refer to Bob Merriam.)

A big new discovery in cigarette blending

The big thing about Chesterfields is their unique blend. The Chesterfield blend is an entirely new combination of tobaccos. This blend is the most important new development in cigarette making in 20 years.

As a result, Chesterfields produce a totally new kind of cigarette enjoyment—they satisfy! Just like a "bite" before bedtime satisfies when you're hungry.

But with all that, Chesterfields are MILD, too!

This new enjoyment (satisfy, yet mild) comes ONLY in Chesterfields because no cigarette maker can copy the Chesterfield blend.

Entered at Charlevoix Post Office aa second class matter.

"We Americans gain; we do not lose anything by the European war," says a Democratic orator. It is preaumed that we Americans means the great majority of people in this country. The Democratic orator did not stop to use mathematics thoroughly. He must have known that the 5-cent loaf of bread has become the 6-cent loaf, either because of the European demand for American wheat since the war started or because of the Democratic influence on prices, to force them upwards.

It is generally admitted that each person in this country should eat a small loaf of bread a day, or sufficient products of flour to amount to the same food value as one small loaf. An increase of 1 cent in the cost of that bread to the eaters means $1,000,000 to the 100,000,000 inhabitants of this country, and for the 365 days of the year it means a total increased cost of $365,000,000.

But the Democratic orator may claim that we Americans have made more than $365,000,000 a year out of the European war. Possibly, but we eat seven pounds of augar each annually, and that is a very low estimate. For a long time since the war started we have been paying 0 cents a pound for augar, instead of the usual American 5 cents a pound. The difference is 4 cents a pound. In a year that makes sugar cost each person in this country 28 cents more. and 28 timea 100,000,000 of population means we are all of us paying $28,000,000 a year more for sugar because of the European war.

Everybody needs one pair of shoes a year, at least. They cost us a dollar a pair more than before the war. That is another $100,000,000 we lose on shoes.

Have you noticed on the household bills that anything else costs more now? The answer is that everything costs more. The total extra cost to Americans for the life-sustaining necessities is close to $2,000,000,000 more a year. Perhaps we have all made more than that out of the European war, but that profit is not noticed in the home economies, not by anybody who has reported yet.

And the European war has aroused the legislators to their "patriotic duty," and they have increased the cost of the United States government by a billion dollars a year, for preparedness for defense and so on into infinite details. We Americans have to pay that, also. And the sum total is more than we make out of the European war, by millions if not billions a year.

When Henry Ford endorsed Presi- Wilson, he waa particular not to advise Ford owners to vote for Wilson, and they will not, to any considerable extent.

Another reason for keeping evangelists away from the border is that some militant might stnrt up "Onward, Christian Soldiers."

Now that we have the meters read, let's fix up the city's auxiliary plant, thus being ready in case of emergency.

At the present price of flour it'll soon become popular to sandwich the bread between the ham.

Special.

The Bsptist pastor leaves for Battle Creek next Monday to attend the Michigan Baptist state convention for four days and then goes to Detroit to attend the Billy Sunday campaign for 10 days. THEATRICAL

"The Flash of An Emerald."

Robert Warwick is presented by the World Film Corporation in the photoplay, "The Flash of An Emerald."

The character of Lucius Waldeck is s study in complex villainy; he is urbane, polished, insinuating, gracious, but above all vulturish. With one hand he would caress a woman, with the other he would rob her of her jewels. In this story he commences his career of gentlemanly crime by robbing a safe of its valuable coatents. Then he seea a very valuable emerald in the possession of a lady who is going on a pilgrimage to the shrine of St. Anne de Beaupre with her sick child. He chloroforms the woman, the maid, and the child, and secures the emerald. He poses as a Russian revolutionary; fails in love with a girl to whom he presenta the emerald. But the girl is the daughter of the woman from whom he stole the emerald, and this discovery leads to his undoing. Ultimstely he commits suicide.

The photoplay has been directed by Albert Capellani; there is an excellent cast supporting Mr. Warwick, and the settings and photography are admirable.

Robert Warwick in "The Flash of An Emerald" is to be shown at the Majestic theatre on Friday, October 13.

CHAPTER II.

The Logical Custodian.

THEN, with a logical attempt at disingenuousness, Caleb said:

"I—I've a friend here, Sarah, whom I'd like to—er—present to you. This is my sister, Miss Hunter," he announced to the silent boy, "and this young man, Sarah, this young man is—er—ah—Mr."—

"I'm Steve," said the boy mildly. "I'm just Stephen O'Mara."

"Certainly!" gasped Caleb. "Quite so—quite so! Sarah, this is just Steve."

The frail little woman with her quaint dignity of another decade failed to move. She did not unbend so much as the fraction of an inch. But hard upon the heels of Caleb's last words the boy went forward unhesitatingly. Hat in the hand that balanced his big steel trap, he stopped in front of her and offered one brown paw.

"How d'ye do, Miss Hunter?" he saluted her gravely, and with a slow smile that discovered for her a row of white and even teeth: "How d'ye do? I—I reckon you're the first dressed up lady I ever did git to know!"

The calm statement took what little breath there had been left in Caleb's lungs. It left Sarah breathless too. But after an infinitesimal moment of waiting she held out her own delicate fingers and took the outstretched hand.

"How d'ye do, Steve?" she answered, and Caleb was at a loss to interpret the suppressed quality of her voice. "And I—some day I am sure it will be a great pleasure to remember that I was the—first!"

Then she faced her brother.

"Will your—will your friend, Mr.—Steve—remain for supper, Cal?" she asked.

And Caleb, quick to see an opening, made the most of this one.

"Stay for supper!" he repeated her question, and he laughed. "Stay—for—supper! Well, I should hope he would. Why—why, he's going to stop for the night."

From the vantage place there at the top of the steps Sarah stood and surveyed her brother's wide and guileless face for a second. Then her lips began to twitch.

"Very clever, Cal," she told him. "Quite clever—for you!"

And she nodded and withdrew to see that the table was laid for three.

Caleb, chuckling, watched her go; then, with a nod to the boy, he started to follow her in. But Steve paused at the threshold, and when the man stopped and looked back to ascertain the cause of his delay he found that the boy was depositing the bear trap upon the porch floor—found him tugging to free the rusty old revolver from his belt.

"I'll leave Samanthy here," the one called Steve stated, and Caleb understood that he meant the trap. "An' I reckon I'd better not lug my weapon into the house neither, hed I? She might"— He nodded in the direction of Sarah's disappearance. "Old Tom says women folks that's gentle born air kind-a skittish about havin' shootin' irons araound the place. And I don't reckon it's the part of men folks to pester 'em."

Caleb didn't know just what to say, so he merely nodded approval. Again he had been made to feel that it was not a boy, but some little old imp, who was explaining to him. Silently he led the way upstairs, and after he had seen the blanket pack deposited in one corner of Sarah's beloved guest room, after he had seen the rusty coat peeled off as a preface to removing the dust accumulation of the long hot day from hands and face, an inspiration came to him. While the boy was washing, utterly lost to everything but that none too simple task, he went out of the room on a still hunt of his own and came back presently with the thing for which he had gone searching. He found the boy wrestling a little desperately with a map of wavy chestnut hair, which only grew the more helpless with every stroke of the brush.

"Never mind that." Caleb met the misapprehension in the boy's eye. "Never mind that. And I—I've taken the liberty of digging out this old canvas shooting coat. It's one I got for Sarah—for my sister—but, as you say, women folks are mighty skittish about anything that has to do with a gun. She never would go even so far as to try it on, but if you don't mind— That coat of yours must be a trifle hot for this weather, I should say."

Steve reached out a hand that trembled a little and took the coat. He took it and stared at it with that same starved and hungry look which he had bestowed a half hour before upon the "etly."

"Do you mean," he asked, and his lips remained parted breathlessly upon the question—"do you mean—this yere's for me?"

Caleb thought of the "tajine"—the "steam injine."

"I mean just that if you'll have it," he replied.

The boy slipped his little body into the garment and wheeled to survey himself in a mirror. In comparison with his old coat it was the purple of a Solomon. There was a cartridge belt across its front, with loops, and after he had looked long and long at his reflection the boy thrust both his thumbs into the belt it made.

Then: "Them's for ketridges," he announced solemnly.

He scowled judiciously and nodded.

And, "I'll hev to git me some the first thing in the mornin'," he said.

At table the boy talked freely, always with his wide eyes upon the face of his questioner, always in the grave and slightly drawling idioms of the woods. Again he confided that he had never before been out of the timber. He explained that Old Tom's untimely taking off a fortnight back had been alone responsible for this pilgrimage. And that opened the way for a question which Caleb had been eager to ask him.

"I suppose this—this Old Tom was some kin of yours?" he observed.

The boy shook his head.

"No," he answered, "no, I ain't never had no kin. I ain't never had nobody—father nor mother, neither!"

Caleb saw Sarah start a little and bite her thin lips. But the birdlike movement of surprise was lost upon the speaker.

"I ain't never had nobody," he reaverred, and Caleb, straining to catch a note of self pity or plea for sympathy in the words, realized that the boy didn't even know what the one or the other was. "I ain't never had nobody but old Tom. And he was—he wasn't nothin'—but what he called my—my"—the sentence was broken while he paused to get the phrase correctly—"he was what he called my 'logical custodian.'"

Guiltily Caleb knew that his next question would savor of indelicacy, but he had to ask it just the same.

"Still I suppose his—his taking off must have been something in the nature of a blow to you?" he suggested.

The boy pursed his lips.

"Well, no," he exclaimed at last nonchalantly; "no-o-o. I can't say's it was. We'd both been expectin' it, I reckon.

"Do you mean—this yere's for me?"

Old Tom he often said he knew that some day he'd go and git just blind, slavin' drunk enough to try an' swim the upper rapids, and two weeks ago he done so."

And the rest of the words were quite casual.

"I kind-a reckon he'd hev made it at that," he offered his opinion, "if they'd hev been a trifle more water. But the rocks was too close to the surface for comfortable swimmin'. The Jenkinses found him down in the slack water Sunday noon or thereabouts, and they said he'd never be no deader, not even if he'd a-died in a reg'lar bed, with a doctor helpin' him along."

Caleb threw his sister one inquiringly helpless glance. Sarah had choked apparently upon a crumb of bread and was coughing stranglingly.

This time when Caleb lifted his eyes he met a startled gleam behind Sarah's half dropped lashes. She was peering steadily into the boy's lean, untroubled face. Caleb voiced the query which he knew must be behind her quiet intentness.

"You said your name was O'Mara, I believe. I suppose that was—ah—Old Tom's last name too?"

Steve laughed. He laughed frankly for the first time since he had halted hours before outside in the dusty road.

"Why, Old Tom had a dozen different names in the last few years," he replied. "He had a new one every time he went outen the woods for a trip. But he always said he mostly favored Brown or Jones or Smith, they bein' quiet and common and not too hard to remember. He just changed names whenever he got tired of his old one, Old Tom did. But he always did 1 , too, that if he'd had as good a one as O'Mara he'd a-kept it—and kept it proud."

At the conclusion of that statement it was Miss Sarah's gaze which went searching across the table for her brother's eyes. But the boy just ran on and on, totally oblivious to their glances.

He told them of his lonely days in the woods shack, when Old Tom went down river and was three or four weeks in returning; he dwelt upon blissful days in the spring when he had been allowed to play a man's part in the small drives which he and Old Tom and the Jenkinses began and which Old Tom and the Jenkinses alone saw through to market in Morrison. He touched lightly and inconsequentially upon certain days when Old Tom would hang for hours over an old tin box filled with soiled and ink smeared memoranda, periods which were always followed by days of moody silence and a week or more of "lessons" in a tattered and thumbed reader which the woodsman had brought up river—lessons as painful and laborious to Old Tom as they were delightful to the starved mentality of the pupil. And Old Tom, the boy explained, was pretty likely to be "lickered up fer quite a spell" after such a session, which invariably began with an exploration of the battered tin box.

The boy told Caleb of days and nights on the trail—boasted unconsciously of Old Tom's supercunning with trap and deadfall and even poisoned bait. And that brought him to the beautifully oiled bear trap which he had left outside the door.

"I brung Samanthy along with me," he stated. "I brung her just because somehow I kind-a thought mebby Old Tom'd be glad if I did. Next to me he always said he set a heap o' store on that ole critter. He said Samanthy was as near to bein' a woman around the house as anything he knew on—she had a voice like a steel trap, and when she got her teeth set in a argument she never did let up. I brung her along with me, and the gun he give me, but I didn't take nuthin' else."

Caleb waited there until he knew that the boy had finished.

"You never bothered about that old tin box?" he inquired casually.

The boy shook his head again.

"Old Tom, whenever he went away for a spell, always said I wan't to meddle with it," he explained. "This time I reckoned his goin' was just about the same thing, only he won't be comin' back, so I—I just locked the box up in the cubberd and hitched the staple into the door and come down myself."

By the time that meal was finished the boy's eyes were so heavily lidded that, fight as he would, they still persisted in drooping till the long lashes curled over his cheeks. And in spite of Caleb's remonstrances it was Sarah who saw him upstairs and into the huge guest room with its four poster and highboy and spindle backed chairs.

(To be continued next week.)

WAS SO WEAK COULD ONLY WALK A SHORT DISTANCE. TANLAC GAVE HER RELIEF.

"My stomach was in such a condition that I had to be very careful of everything that I ate. In fact I could not even drink milk without having it ferment on my stomach.

"I suffered from indigestion and occasionally had headaches. I lost my appetite and seemed to lack energy. I lost a good deal of my strength and could not walk any distance without giving out completely.

"I grew very discouraged about my condition, since I had taken so many remedies with out getting relief. I lost so much weight that I was alarmed about my condition.

"One day I happened to see in the paper a strong indorsement of Tanlac and decided to give it a trial. It helped me from the very start. My stomach soon got better and I began to gain in strength and weight. My appetite came back and it was not long before I could eat any thing I wanted. Recently I was able to walk down town and back home again, a distance of about two miles, this is some thing I have not been able to do for a long time.

"I think Tanlac is the best medicine in the world and take pleasure in recommending it," was the statement made by Mrs. Dora S. Carpenter of 241 Dwight Street, Saginaw, in an interview with the Tanlac representative.

Tanlac, the national tonic, is prepared from roots, barks and herbs, and is nature's own remedy and has been publicly indorsed by over 250,000 people who have been relieved of stomach trouble, indigestion, accumulation of gas, nervousness, sleeplessness, rheumatism, catarrhal and kidney affections and has made them feel young and vigorous again and renewed their strength and ambition.

TANLAC CAN BE OBTAINED HERE ONLY AT THE STORE OF B. A. HERMAN.

Tanlas can also be obtained at the store of W. A. Hyslop at Boyne City.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN HAPPENINGS

Events of Interest to Courier Readers

Sued for Watch "In Hock."

A justice trial before Justice Hammond, of Boyne City, last week attracted considerable interest. The suit was brought against Ira Crick, second hand dealer on Lake street, by Mrs. F. F. LaMart, for the recovery of a watch given as security for a loan some months ago.

It seems the watch was given for a small loan and when the owner desired to redeem it, she could not. The prosecuting attorney was brought into the case and it began to look bad inasmuch as the loaner of the money was not a licensed pawn broker.

At the trial Mrs. LaMart was given a jurors verdict for $15.00 and the case will now doubtless be forgotten, but it serves as warning to so-called "loan sharks" that the law governing pawn-brokers is in effect in this county as well as other parts of the state.

Great Scarcity of Laborers.

Men from northern Michigan are being attracted to Detroit, Flint, Muskegon and other cities of the south part of the state by the big wages offered for all kinds of work, says the Petoskey Evening News. Common laborers draw from three dollars a day up and skilled workmen can get almost any wages asked and few get less than five dollars a day.

This condition makes it almost impossible to secure workmen for the various undertakings in Petoskey and the nearby places, work on the street improvements being at a standstill today because of a lack of men.

Men with teams can be hired but workmen are not to be had. Contractors say they cannot get brick layers in Petoskey and have had to send outside and offer wages much higher than are paid in other cities in order to get men.

Smallpox In Traverse City.

Five cases of smallpox have appeared at Traverse City only one of which is at all severe. The victims are Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Newton, Mr. and Mrs. Morgan Paige and a laborer named Stover, who lives at 820 Webster street. Local authorities were notified from Detroit that Mrs. Belle Ebare, who had been visiting in this city and was permitted to leave town after she had become ill, had a severe case of smallpox. Fresh vaccine points have been telegraphed for, and the city health officer is recommending that the entire community be vaccinated.

$1.00 Per Bushel for Pickles.

A communication has been received by the People's State Savings bank, of East Jordan, says the Enterprise, with request that its contents be given publicity, from the Security Trust Co., receivers for Williams Bros. Co., states that pickle growers in these parts should have no fear regarding prices and contracts for next year.

Neither the Williams Bros. Co., nor the receivers are in a position to contract at present, owing to negotiations, now under way, looking to removal from the hands of the receiver at an early date. Growers are urged to go ahead with the plans for next year with the assurance that the pickle stations will be operated by Williams Bros. Co., or an equally reliable firm. Preparations for next year's crop may be made with "full expectation that the present salting stations will be conducted and their contracts solicited in plenty of time for their operation, probably before January or February at the latest."

The communication goes on to state that prices will be good. We herewith quote direct: "As to prices we have to say that should it turn out after all that the receiver is in control of the property long enough to make contracts, the receiver will pay at all stations $1.00 per bushel for small pickles and proportionate prices for other sizes."

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

VAN PELT'S TOURING DIARY

Trip No. 3.

Troy, N. Y., September 24th

There is only one way and one time to do things and that is to do it right and to do it now. This I found out by not keeping better tab on my trip for the past day or two.

Thursday, September 21st. We drove from Rochester to Syracuse, about 90 miles. Friday, September 22nd, drove from Syracuse to Troy, 160 miles. Splendid roads all the way. We made this drive from 9:00 a. m. to 5:00 p. m. with a stop for dinner. We found some 14 foot roads but they are too narrow. Sixteen is just right. Here is where you find repair men on the road, keeping them in good order. They have piles of material at convenient distances and have a wagon with a barrel of dope. This will faze our old friend, Lorraine, of the Enterprise—on the sides of the main road they have a single track of earth road for carriage driving and the poor dear horses do not have to travel on the hard pavement. In fact, it is done to keep the teams off the road and out of the way of the autos. The farmers here have big motor trucks to haul their produce to market and to do it quick. They tell me it saves both ways. They can sell and deliver when the markets are high. They also keep the gutters clean and open by the sides of the road, so as to prevent the washing out of the sides of the road, and every filled-in place is fenced on both sides and the fence painted white. We passed through the hop country with large alfalfa fields and saw large herds of Holstein cattle.

Saturday, September 23rd. This has been one of the big days of my life. We left Troy at 9:15 a. m., for the Grand View House at East Windham, Green county, N. Y., high up in the Catskill mountains, 25 miles from the city of Catskill, and at an elevation of 2,500 feet one half mile. We made this ride in less than three hours, 70 miles and having to pass through other cities at a 15 mile limit of speed. We prefer to obey the law and not be held up, believing that by so doing we really make time. This has been the most exciting drive of the trip so far. An old acquaintance had a new Packard. As he was going to the same place, he volunteered to show us the way. As he left, he said, follow me. From the smile on the face of his chauffeur, I gathered the fact that he thought we could not keep up. I said to Hubert, "Did you hear what he said?" "Yes," he replied. "Well, do it." I made up my mind then and there that I'd follow that d—n Packard if I busted my old bunch of machinery. And we did—we were close behind him all the time for the first 25 miles, and I guess (in fact they told me) when we reached our destination, that they did not expect me to keep up and that after they had gone that distance, it would be better and safer for all concerned to drive a little slower and we had no difficulty in keeping up while crawling up the mountain.

I wish I had words to tell of the beauty of the Grand View Mountain House scenery. From there the scene is one of such extraordinary beauty that words fail me to describe it. The day was perfect, clear, sunshiny, cool and bracing. The view extends from east to west and in front about 20 miles, and in the valley are several little villages, country churches, school houses and beautiful farms, orchards, etc. Flying clouds caused deep shadows in several spots and the bright sunshine equally bright ones. It reminded me of the ocean, never alike for any length of time. After a most sumptious dinner, heavy clouds came up and we saw three different storms of rain. Often the clouds that give the rain are below the level of the hotel and only those who have witnessed such a scene can appreciate it. I used to think that Asheville, N. C., and the mountains there more grand, but I never saw anything as pretty and beautiful as this. I have seen more grand, wonderful scenes in the Rockies, but none so quieting and satisfactory as at the Mountain House, East Windham, Green county, N. Y. From this point, we could look into five different states. On our way back, we broke a couple of the leaves in one of our front springs and had a flat tire, the only trouble of the day, so we are laid up here for an extra day, but, as it is the home of my childhood, it is not so bad, although we haven't the good hotel that we have been having at other places. We are going to patent a scoop to catch the chickens by the road side. Do you want to take some stock in it?

Yours,

VAN PELT.

WILL KAISER SEE ST. HELENA?

EUROPE ALREADY PLANS FOR VENGEANCE ON EMPEROR

But All Depends On the Decisive Winning of War By Allied Nations—Escaped Plenned.

The writer of the following astounding revelations of "the prime intention" of English-French diplomacy "after the war" is a famous American collego professor and authoritative expert in the dealings of international law. He has just returned to United States after a summer in London and Paris, where he was in constant communication with the highest government officials there. During this time he was made acquainted with the proposed "disposition" of the kaiser of Germany by the allies. The Courier prints this amazing story simply as a piece of important news and it is to be considered in this respect alone by readers.

Are the allies preparing St. Helena for the kaiser of Germany—in the event they win the war, as they certainly believe they are going to do?

This is no fantastic question, asked for the sake of sensationalism, and hased merely on wartime rumors. Instead it is nn outgrowth of the major topic of certain grim deliberations now taking place in the entente capitals of Europe.

I know it is the major topic, the "prime intention" of the big men of the allies, for the sole and simple reason that I heard them discussing it myself.

And the question in high circles of London and France now is not so much whether or not the allies can wreak vengeance on the kaiser in person. It is simply what this punishment shall be.

No State Secret in Europe.

You do not have to take my word alone on this. Ask any man, with access to the first European circles—any such man who bas traveled recently in England and France, and he will tell you, the same; That a tremendous personal drama which will startle the eyes of the world is certainly going to accompany the denounment of the war.

Of this I am positive—that is those final negotiations, when the fate of nations, the happiness of whole peoples, are at stake, so fiery a drama will involve, in some measure, at least, the house of Hohenzollern, that it will obscure in the eyes of the world all those other questions—questions of frontiers, of indemnities and the like.

For granting that the allies will have any debatablo rights at the war's end, the discussion of the fate of Emperor William, ltko that of Achilles, Caesar and Napoleon, is bound to go down into history as one so engrossing to the popular mind that it eclipses in interest the world-events in which he played a part.

"Allow None Guilty to Escepe."

Merely as aome tangible proof of the widespread existence of this grim determination of England in particular to mete out a dire fate to the kaiser personally, I will cite to you the public testimony of Dr. Benjamin Rand, philosophical librarian at Harvard university, given after a long visit to England. Dr. Rand said:

"One of the frequent notes we heard atruck at the meetinga held on the second anniversary of the war was to the effect that the individual guilty must not be allowed to escape, and the malefactors responsible for the sinking of the Lusitnnin and the murders of Miss Cavell and Capt. Fryatt must be punished!"

The British government, through Premier Asquith, has given two pledges of punishment, pledges that are aimed not only at the kaiser, but at the Hohenzollern dynasty, and all the directing officers of ths German army.

Do Not Regard Jury Finding As Joke.

On April 27, 1915, Asquith declnred "with all deliberation" that the government would hold it its duty to exact reparation against "the guilty agents and actors in the matter," and on July 31 last, following the murder of Capt. Fryatt, he emphatically reiterated the intention of the government to bring to justice the criminals "whoever" they might be, and "whatever" might be tbeir poaitions."

The allies mean by this none other than Emperor William himself, and do not consider in the least a joke the fact that tbe kaiser was found guilty of murder by the jury of Kinsale after the Lusitania horror.

Nearly a hundred noted French and English leaders of opinion, including the dean of the Paris faculty of letters, the dean of the law school, Alfred Capus of the Freneb academy, Andre Fardieu, member of the chamber of dcputies, and otbers have recently signed a petition to the entente governments asking an immediate declaration that the "authors, instigators and accomplices" of the crimes charged against Germany, "including the highest authorities," will get punished after the war.

French legal experts declare that by Germany's own acts she recognizes the right of a nation to try a criminal at the spot where the crime was committed, regardless of the nationality of the criminal.

This recognized doctrine, they assert, will make the solemn trial of Emperor William by military or civil tribunals at Lille, and in Belgium and in England and Serbia, binding under international law, whatever may be the sentence.

Banishment Logical Punishment.

Will that sentence—depending, of course, on the allies being victorious—consist in banishment for life to St. Helena?

Every word spoken by those in a position to know indicates that banishment of the Hohenzollerns would be the punishment. In that case St. Helena would be the logical place.

To this volcanic island of 47 squsre miles' area Great Britain has sent many of her prisoners of war, including Gen. Cronje and other Boers. But, of course, the case of Napoleon is the great precedent to which the allies point for parallels.

But can the allies catch the kaiser, even if his armies should be completely defeated?

The Germans are known to have several trump cards that they would surely play to euchre such an outcome. The only reason Napoleon did not flee to America was that there was no way of making his escape.

Emperor William, it is known, would choose the United States as his foster land, in the event of the great disaster to his armies, which no German now admits is possible.

For the United States is the only great power that has not turned against him. Even Brazil, supposedly the center of a powerful German colony, has voted its open sympathy with the allies.

Told That Escape Has Been Planned By Kaiser.

And for Emperor William there would be a definite avenue of escape to America. How?

Well, I was seriously told in London that the recent trip of the submarine trader Deutschland to Baltimore was really only an experimental voyage—with a distant purpose in mind, connected with William II of Germany. In the last days of the war, some Londoners firmly believe, there will be a special express train made up in Berlin ready in the event of final defeat to take a clear track to Wilhelmshaven.

And—say these prophets—the kaiser would be safely brought to Baltimore under the Atlantic ocean by Capt. Koenig of the Deutschland.

Get ready for winter.

Gathering autumn leaves.

Everybody really wants peace.

William Smith is the name of the new M. E. minister.

An eleven pound baby boy over to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Stafford.

Last Thursday evening our young people had a very sociable party at the hall.

Now Henry Klooster comes out with a new seven passenger Studebaker car.

A number of Atwoodites attended the home coming at Central Lake last Thursday.

There is one art that never goes out of fashion—that of speaking appropriate words in a kindly manner.

Allie Wiekott, of Alba, was a visitor in this section one day last week. Years ago he taught the Atwood school.

We take notice of the item published in the last issue of the Courier of how many beans David Alexander raised from one bean, as Mr. Alexander formerly farmed near here. He has certainly lost his art of growing the little navy bean. George Parsons, from one bean planted, counted 162 pods, making an average of five beans in each pod, a total of 810 beans. Some bean contest—next.—Ed.

SPRINGVALE SCHOOL NOTES

Just a word from the woods to let you know we are wide awake and still "on the job."

Several from Springvale and vicinity attended the Cheboygan county fair at Wolverine.

F. R. Bulow was ill two or three days last week.

The "Busy Bee Sunshine club" had its first meeting at the Springvale hotel with Miss Allen. A short business session was held first. The committee on bylaws reported laws, among which were the following: No whispering during business session. No quarreling. Politeness shall prevail. These were adopted by the club and every failure to abide by these laws shall be met with a fine of five cents. Fancy work was the principal features.

Mrs. T. J. Modie and Mrs. W. R. Allen were callers at the school last Friday afternoon.

The sixth grade has been studying Joaquin Miller's poem "Sail On" for reading.

Nellie Conkright was absent from school Friday on account of illness.

The third and fourth grades made posters for language work Friday.

Mr. Isaac Bartlett is visiting at the home of J. M. Milford.

Our school resolved itself into a city one day last week with city officers and all. The aisles between the seats represent the streets which are named after presidents. On the day of election it was funny to see the little candidates out with their little cards on which some had drawn a representation of themselves and had written their policies. Political speeches were quite the thing too, and were enough to make a really truly candidate green with envy. The work of the street commissioner and board of health is really the most important. The former goes around every night and sees that all desks are in order, while the health commissioner sees that pencils, fingers, books, etc., are kept out of the mouth. These suggestions were taken from the "Normal Instructor" for September.

We use the approved text books here.

There will be a box social and spelling match here soon. Watch for particulars.

To wipe out the Saloons in Michigan you must vote on two amendments, "Yes" on the Prohibition amendment and "No" on the "Home Rule" amendment.

It is just as important to vote against "home rule" or home ruin as it is to vote in favor of Prohibition. How can liquor men advocate "home rule" when they destroy the home and disregard all rule.

TUBERCULOSIS ON THE INCREASE

FREE CLINIC REVEALS STARTLING CONDITIONS

Out nf 45 Persons Examined 13 Positive Cases and 14 Suspicious Cases Are Discovered.

The elinie for the examination of persons affected or susceptible to tubereulosis, now in session at the Masonie Temple, under the auspiees of the state board of health, will eomplete its work today.

At the time of our going to press, 45 persons have been examined, resulting in the discovery of 13 positive eases, 14 suspieious cases (which latter class comprises those suffering from a slight lesion of the lungs not now sufficiently pronounced to be considered a full fledged case but whieh later may develop as sueh) and 18 negative eases.

The staff who are registered at the Charlevoix hotel eonsists of Drs. De Kleine, F. Leland, E. R. Vander Shee, Charles E. Rowe, J. V. White and Registered Nurses Flora M. Neal, Susan K. Deck and Helen De Spelder Moore.

A significant fact in connection with the findings of the elinie is that a large portion of the victims are are children of school age. It is further demonstrated thnt the major eause for the alarming foothold whieh the disorder seems to have gained in tbis city and vicinity is the all to prevalent practiee of keeping out of our homes In the winter time one of the greatest foes of this disease—fresh air. Will people never understand that fresh air don't kill half so quiek as stuffy rooms and overheated stoves?

It might be well to bear in mind too that fresh air heats far quieker than stale, foul air, and thus it is nctually possible to save fuel and keep warmer if we let in the fresh air before we begin to heat up.

REO AUTOMOBILE CRASHES INTO TREE

Cuts Up Antics Equal to Any Car In the Lizzie Class.

The touring ear owned by Louis Orlowski ran amuek on the North hill between Dixon avenue and the bridge last Sunday afternoon and erashed into a tree in front of John Baker's property. Some slight damage was done to the fenders and the only easualty oeeurred to Mr. Baker, who jammed his thumb in helping to get the ear back on to the road.

Mrs. Orlowski was learning to drive and it seems the bridge swung open as they were descending the hill, eausing her in her momentary eonfusion, to lose eontrol. Things are eertainly eoming to a pretty pass. We might look for sueh anties in a Ford, but a dignified Reo—oh, dreadful!

VOLUME 34, NO. 41 | 10 PAGES | CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN, WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 18, 1916 | PRICE $1.50 PER YEAR

COUNTY SOLONS HURRYING WORK

EXPECT TO BE THROUGH BY SATURDAY

Idea of Working Without Pay Does Not Appeal to Them—Want Contents of Cellar.

The board of supervisors are expected to bring their activities to a close by Saturday of this week. We say, are expected, because they will be unable to draw pay after that time and consequently, you see, we are hitting pretty close to the mark when we fix Saturday next as the limit of their operations, unless given access to the cellar.

So far, the claim committee has reported; also the committee to settle with the treasurer. Three mills for road purposes have been voted and six mills for the county.

Among other things, the purchase of a blood hound for the department of justice is contemplated. They tried the animal out today, but decision as to the purchase has been deferred until their next session.

It was also decided to partition off a portion of the jail basement as a root cellar for vegetables, fruits, etc. All windows in the court house are to be reputtied and new front doors to replace the present weather beaten portals. An up-to-date system of ventilation regulation will be installed and last, but not least, a cistern will be dug to receive water from the boiler when it is necessary to empty some to clean flues.

Oh yes, by the way, watch for the street sprinkler when it comes out on the roads again next spring, or better yet ask Charley Howard if the court house cellar is still damp.

Evidently the board has a poor opinion of the "Home Rule" amendment to be voted upon at the November election, judging from their actions in passing the following resolutions:

Resolved that we, the board of supervisors of Charlevoix county, express ourselves as opposed to the proposed amendment to the constitution known as "Home Rule." We believe it to be Rum Rule and Home Ruin. First: Because the county is the unit in the enforcement of liquor laws and necessarily must be under our present form of government. The sheriff and prosecuting attorney are the principal law enforcing officers and the tax payers of the entire county must foot the bills. To allow the voters of one township or city to saddle on the entire county expenses concerning which they have nothing to say is unjust and absurd. Second: We believe the cities and villages of our county could not exist without the country patronage, therefore we should have a voice in deciding what shall be the moral and social standing of the cities and villages of our county. Third: The township is too small a unit to care for the results of the saloon, and we would favor the unit larger than smaller.

High Wind Does Damage.

The high wind Monday night did considerable damage in town. Among its depredations were included the blowing out of a light of glass in the Hat Shop show window, the demolition of Fred Meyer's awning and the uprooting of a giant tree on the Charlevoix club grounds and one directly back of Miller's store.

Will Soon Go South.

Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Baker will soon leave for St. Augustine, Florida, where they will again conduct the Granada, one of the big winter hotels of that city. The Granada has been greatly improved during the summer, running water placed in over 40 rooms and many baths installed.

Death of Mrs. O'Neil.

Just before going to press we are advised of the death of Mrs. Amos O'Neil at her home on west Upright avenue, which occurred this morning at nine o'clock, terminating a long illness. Further details are not at this time available.

Miss Jennie Black left Monday morning for Saginaw to attend the annual meeting of the State Grange now being held in that city.

The ladies of the O. E. S. will give a 25c supper Wednesday evening, October 25, from 5:30 to 7:00 p. m. The public is cordially invited.

DOG POISONER AT FIENDISH WORK AGAIN

Owners Warned to Give Their Canines Close Attention.

The dog poisoners are again at work in Charlevoix. Bob Russell lost a good hunting dog Monday night in this manner.

The skunk who will poison a dog is ripe for any form of dastardly depredation from arson to sheep stealing. We can easily imagine that the punishment meted out to a miscreant of this character who should attempt to operate anywhere south of the Mason-Dixon line would include hot lead and hemp rope, if not fagots and kerosene oil. However, lacking the ability to apply measures of such severity, no matter how well deserved, persons owning valuable dogs should keep them under cover until the poisoners or poisoner have either been apprehended or desisted from the pursuit of their fiendish purpose.

UP AGAINST A DISAGREEABLE TASK

NOT ALL PLAY IN COUNTY TREASURER'S OFFICE

Forty Pages of "Charge Backs" In Tax Lists Totaling $4,071.67. Returned for Revision.

Forty pages of "charge backs" have been recently received from the state treasurer by County Treasurer George Weaver, and he is right in the middle of one of the "headaches" of the treasurer's job, being compelled to sift through these pages and list those "charge backs" which are found for each township.

The total amount of the "charge back" is $4,071.67. Of this amount, $342.74 is state tax and must be paid to the state by the county. The county will in turn collect this money from the townships in which the errors originated.

The "charge back" is an itemized list of descriptions which are inaccurately or indefinitely given. When the boundary lines are vaguely given, it is impossible to collect a tax on that property and the owner is not allowed to pay a tax even though he so desires. An illustration of how these errors are made in giving descriptions is found in one item which gives the boundary of a property, as extending to the water's edge and thence along the water's edge for a certain distance. The state auditors declare this description to be indefinite, as the water's edge is not stationary.

Treasurer Weaver now must go through the "charge backs," listing those against each township. These lists he will forword to the township treasurers.

GIDDINGS-BUSH

Well Known Citizens Married Wednesday at Petoskey.

On Wednesday evening, October 11th, at 8:30 p. m. occurred the wedding of Mrs. Mary Giddings, of Charlevoix, to D. T. Bush, of Marion township. Fred Butler drove them to Petoskey, where the Rev. Mr. Harris tied the knot at the Episcopal church. Mr. and Mrs. Bush then took the night train for Grand Rapids. From there they went on to Lansing where they will make their home. The Courier wishes them a long and happy married life and much success.

Auction Sale.

Page 5 of this issue contains the auction sale of M. A. McDonald, at his farm three-fourths mile east of Ironton, on the Boyne City road, on Tuesday, October 31, commencing at 10:00 a. m. The list of stock and farm implements is unusually large and many a bargain will be the reward of those who are among the bidders. W. E. Byers will cry the sale.

List Your Property.

Mrs. J. S. Baker requests that all persons desiring her to handle the renting or leasing of cottages or rooms list their property at once, before she leaves for the south. This includes furnished cottages, rooms for light housekeeping, furnished rooms, with or without meals, etc. List them carefully and turn them in at once. Adv. 42t1

INTERESTED IN GRAYLING LETTERS

RELATES EXPERIENCES OF FIRST PICKET DUTY

J. G. Reed, of Solono, New Mexico, Sympathizes With Young Soldier Boys On Border.

We were recently in receipt of a letter from an old soldier, J. G. Reed, who now resides at Solano, New Mexico. Commenting on the pleasure he felt at reading the articles that have been running in the Courier on the life of the boys at Grayling, Mr. Reed relates a few experiences of his own, which may be interesting to our readers, especially to those who wore the blue in the '61-'65 period. He says in part:

"I was a young soldier of 17 at Camp Tippecanoe, Indiana, and Camp Carrington, Indianapolis, in August and September of the year 1862. I helped drill the company at those camps, though only a private, but had learned the drill (then used mostly) from Capt. Gaddis of the regular army, who was at Frankfort, Indiana, for a short time. On crossing the Ohio river at Cincinnati, at the time of the Kirby-Smith scare, our company (G, 86th Indiana) was ordered on picket for the first time. Captain Seager came to me and said, 'Reed, we go on picket tonight. I want you to go out with the boys and take charge of the line. I appoint you first corporal.' Well, I did not swell up—it was too great a responsibility, it was too real for any swelling up. No time to think—only to act. There might be a fight before morning and all was excitement in the city, expecting the enemy at any moment. But all blew over. In a short time, we were moved down to Louisville, Kentucky, were placed with older troops and campaigned mostly with the army of the Cumberland to the close of the war."

DOG CAUSES GREATEST STRAIN

SHAKES BRIDGE MORE THAN LOADED TEAM

Rythm of Step Determines Intensity of Vibration—Queer Physical Phenomenon at Bridge.

Contrary to the ideas of most of us, one need not go far afield to observe peculiar phenomena. Close at hand, oftentimes, under our feet, as it were, lie mysteries of absorbing fascination. Who would suppose that in so homely and commonplace an affair as our swing bridge over the channel exists food for scientific discussion and conjecture.

In the matter of stress and strain, one would naturally suppose that a loaded team or seven passenger car would place a greater burden upon the stays and girders of a suspension bridge than any other unit of traffic. But such, strangely, is not the case. No, the time when rods and stays creak the loudest and the up and down heavings of the framework are most severely felt by the lonely occupant of the little house perched high among the girders is when some inoffensive little—guess—yes, dog steps on to the planking.

Ridiculous, you say. No, it is a well substantiated fact and the explanation is this. The vertical oscillations or up and down vibrations caused by a team, car, or by the steps of a man or horse occur with such frequency and rythm as to practically neutralize each other.

To explain—a trotting horse places one foot on the bridge, causing a slight downward movement or oscillation. His next step is so timed as to catch the reaction of this movement, on the rebound, as it were, and check or neutralize it, and so on with his successive steps. The same is true of the vibrations caused by the wheels of a car or wagon.

But when Rover or Ponto starts across it is a different matter. Each of his little pattering steps make but a slight impression by themselves, but are timed just right so that each faint downward impulse given to the floor of the bridge is reinforced by the next step, and the next and the next, and when doggie has reached the other end, the whole structure is rocking up and down in an alarming fashion. Funny, isn't it. But it is so serious a matter that on many suspension bridges dogs are absolutely forbidden, unless carried across. Elmer Johnson says that he can tell the moment a dog steps onto the bridge.

DEAD FROM INFANTILE PARALYSIS

DREAD DISEASE MAKES APPEARANCE IN COUNTY

Eighteen Year Old Youth of Chandler Township Dies After Short Illness.

The first case of infantile paralysis reported in Charlevoix county since the dread disease invaded Michigan this year, was reported from Chandler township. John Mackey, 18 years old, was stricken last week and passed away Sunday evening, October 8.

The district school attended by the youth has been closed for two weeks because of the case. No one knows where the victim negotiated the disease and many were exposed before the nature of the ailment was learned.

Shortly after being stricken both limbs and one side of the youth's body was paralyzed. He passed away Sunday evening at eight o'clock. Burial services were held the following day without funeral services.

This is the first case reported in Chorlevoix county and every precaution has been taken to prevent the spread of the disease.

OPENING NUMBER MONDAY EVENING

FIRST ATTRACTION OF CHARLEVOIX LECTURE COURSE

Schuman Quintet Composed of Five Star Musicians—Ticket Sale Opens Saturday.

The Charlevoix lecture course will open its program of five big numbers, next Monday evening, October 23. The course this year, secured from the Redpath bureau, is one of exceptional merit, all the five numbers are big attractions, each one having its own individual qualities, that make it different, and unique. The course is worth much more than the price that is asked for the season tickets. People who have heard some of the numbers that the committee has selected buy season tickets without solicitation, for they realize the high quality of the attractions.

The first of the five big attractions occurs at the opera house Monday, October 23rd, at eight o'clock. You cannot afford to miss this musical treat. The Schuman Quintet is composed of five star musicians. It is in fact an all star cast, each person excelling in his or her special line.

Mr. Carl Lampert, the leader of the quintet has a real message for the people. The Schuman program is educational and entertaining, due to the personel of the quintet. Mr. Carl Lambert, first violinist, played for nine years in the Thomas orchestra, and is at present connected with some of the most notable musical institutions in America.

Mr. Carl Portune, pianist, is both a pianist and organist of high ability.

Miss Helen Portune, dramatic soprano and concert violinist, gave up a flattering theatrical musical offer to go with the Schumans.

Mrs. Grace Kaplun, concert pianiste, is a woman of great musical ability.

Mr. Harry Kaplun, cello virtuoso, was formerly a member of the Cincinnati Symphony orchestra.

The people of Charlevoix cannot afford to miss this rare musical treat. Miss Beatrice Herington and Miss Bessie Hammet has or will sellcit you for a season ticket. You cannot afford to miss the five big numbers, when you consider your town and yourself. Buy early, buy now, buy at once. Thanks.

Reserve seats will be issued in order of arrival at Central Drug store. Not more than four seats in any row, unless for immediate family.

The reserve seats for the first number, October 23, 1916, will be at the Central Drug store Saturday even 7:30.

The single admissions for this number will be 75 cents. The cost of this number makes this necessary. All other single admissions will be 50 cents.

SRIGLEY-CRAMPTON NUPTIALS WEDNESDAY

Wedding Took Place at Home of Bride—Now on Wedding Tour.

Our premonitions of last week were justified. Miss Edna May Srigley and Mr. Cleo F. Crampton were married at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Srigley, of Hayes, on Wednesday evening last. Miss Cora B. Drigget acted as maid of honor and James Leenhouts was best man. Mrs. Earl Shapton played the wedding march and the bridal party took their places under an arch while the Rev. Quinton Walker conducted the ring ceremony of the Methodist ritual which bound the young couple to their solemn obligations.

The bride wore a beautiful gown of white crepe de chene and carried a bouquet of roses. Miss Drigget was gowned in rose satin. After the ceremony, a luncheon was served.

Mrs. Crampton is a graduate of the Charlevoix high school, '13 and county Normal class of '14 and has been teaching in the county for the past two years. The groom is well known in Charlevoix and has worked at the Ben Brown garage this summer.

The young people left the following morning for a week's visit in the southern part of the state.

WHAT'S THE REASON?

Many Charlevoix People in Poor Health Without Knowing the Cause.

There are scores of people who drag out a miserable existence without realizing the cause of their suffering. Day after day they are racked with backache and headache; suffer from nervousness, dizziness, weakness, languor and depression. Perhaps the kidneys have fallen behind in their work of filtering the blood and that may be the root of the trouble. Look to your kidneys, assist them in their work—give them the help they need. You can use no more highly recommended remedy than Doan's Kidney Pills—endorsed by people all over the country and by your neighbors in Charlevoix.

Mrs. M. Olney, 310 W. Hurlburt Ave., Charlevoix, says: "I consider Doan's Kidney Pills a valuable kidney remedy. I have taken them several times for kidney complaint and severe backaches and have been greatly benefited. Others of the family have used Doan's Kidney Pills, procured at the Ivy Drug Store, for lame back and pains in the kidneys and have had good results."

SCHOOL NOTES

A week from last Wednesday evening about 8:30 o'clock Charlevoix or rather Park avenue was visited by a band of (what shall I call them) Muses? No indeed, for never did muses of ancient Greece parade in the light of the moon in such ao extremely ungainly manner as these ——— beings.

We are informed by Livy that these muses were,

. . . . . graceful in every move,
And whiled away the dire hours of the night,
By dancing on bewitching soil."

Now such a distinct definition makes it evident, and destroys all opportunity for extrication, that these were 'not muses' engaged in their evening carnival, but more could it be likened to the Marathon. And such tremendous strides. We agree with the ancient philosopher in saying "bewitching soil." It certainly was not magnetized.

If you could have seen (?) stepping it off over the hill in the rear of the Bartlett House you would reflect our opinion.

Of course the question is arising in the readers mind as to what was the cause of all this unusual activity, and why the before-mentioned miscreants were fleeing in such wild disorder. We can only say, "There's a Reason" and leave the conjecture to the remaining members of the clan.

In the morning the only evidence of the flight was the badly bent fence in the rear of the Miller cottage and a large piece of turf recently loosened from the bank facing the channel. We have a lingering suspicion that n certain member of the senior class could account for the latter condition in a treatise on "Getting closer to Nature."

With apologies to Edgar Allen Poe we quote the following extract from "A Senior Tragedy:"

And the Seniors, never running?
Still are dancing, still are dancing,
Dancing on the Bartlett's floor,
And their eyes did nll perceive,
That which they did not believe,
And the law's light standing o'er,
Cast it's shadow on the door.
Then the Seniors, out from that shadow,
Vanished throogh the door;
Quoth the Seniors, "Nevermore."

The school board should provide beds for the geometry room subject to a suggestion from the instructor that we view the problems "lying down." For a more complete explanation of this late method we refer you to that instructor.

It should become a state law that all clothes lines should be hoisted at least six feet from the ground. Superintendent Craig is the originator and ardent advocator of such a reform owing to his unfortunate collision last week with a low clothes line, causing him to make his appearance Monday morning with his face badly bruised.

Last Thursday morning Dr. Plant gave a very interesting and instructive lecture to the students and faculty of the high school relative to the "conservation of health." He pointed out the large amounts of money annually expended by the county for various necessities and improvements, namely the poor house fund, where he explained that over one-third of the people there were there because of disease and yet the county gave nothing towards its prevention.

Last Friday we heard the school bell sounding its summons somewhat earlier than usual, 7:30 in the morning. The "powers that be" had agreed to start school at that time and run until one o'clock with an intermission of 20 minutes in order that those who desired might go to East Jordan to see the foot ball game. It is much to be regretted that, although nearly everyone promised to be there at 7:30, there were several who thought so little of their own word that they were late both at 7:30 and at the close of the recess. It is this abuse of privileges which make them difficult to obtain.

Last Friday, after school closed at 1 o'clock, the foot ball team journeyed to East Jordan, where they were defeated 27-0. The trouble lay

Two Ways With a Boy

By John E. Swaim in Country Gentleman.

Is your boy getting his chance?
Are you merely giving him food, clothes and shelter as the law requires or
Are you training him to help himself?
Does he have work that he likes because he earns praise and pocket money or Does he merely work because you command him?
Do you work with him or merely talk at him?
Do you make him feel that he has the chance to earn more, do more and be more than you if he will try?
Which of these stories fits your case?

Story Number 1.

In a county of Oklahoma lives a family of four members—father, mother, son and daughter. The son joined the Boys' Corn club in 1912. He was encouraged by his father. The boy got the best acre on the farm. He got the barnyard manure for fertilizer. His father assisted him in getting good seed and advised him with his work. The boy was permitted to have sufficient time, horses and machinery to care for his crop as directed by the department of agriculture. The boy grew 101 bushels of corn on his one acre the first year.

Every year since, be has been a member of the boys' club. He has always been successful in his work. He has learned the game and has been applying the lessons in his father's field as well as his own. He has become known throughout Oklahoma as a breeder of Johnston county white seed corn. His seed corn is in demand at three dlolars a bushel. During that four years that he has been a club member he has won more than $400 worth of prizes. He joined the Pig club and became interested in livestock. He now owns seven head of pure-bred Duroc Jersey hogs, six head of well-bred cattle and a horse. This stock he has secured from the income he has received from his club work.

The home is ideal. The father and son are now as chummy as schoolboys. They work to each other's interests. The father calls the boy his partner. The boy feels the responsibility of making the father's work a success. There is no thought of this boy's leaving home—the city has no attraction for him. He says he wants to learn all he can about agriculture so he can help his folks make home more attractive.

He will do it.

Story Number 2.

Another family on the other side of the state has four members—father, mother and two sons. Son No. 1 ran away from home some time ago. Son No. 2 joined the Boys' Kafir club in 1915. When the crop was gathered the grain was put into the bin with the father's The boy heard nothing more of the crop.

In the spring of 1916 he joined the Pig club. The father said: "What are you going to feed your pig? We are short of feed." The boy then got a job with a neighbor for a day or two in order to get money to buy feed. When he came home his father took all his money, not leaving him a cent. The boy, greatly discouraged, went to his mother. He told her that if he failed to come home some time not to worry.

A few weeks ago he was cultivating corn for his father. He did not return in the evening. When the father went to look for him he found the team tied to a fence—the boy was gone. A week later the mother received a card from the boy. He was working for a farmer in Kansas at $25 a month and board.

The father is now trying to secure a hired man to take the place of the boy. He has had two, but they have both been unsatisfactory.

The boy should have been kept at home and in school for a number of years. He is too young to make his own way. Some livestock of his own, a little encouragement, and he would have been there. The boy may turn out bad—no one knows—due to the lack of a mother's guiding hand. Think of the heartaches and worry that would have been prevented had the home been agreeable and the boy remained.

WHAT CATARRH IS

It has been said that every third person has catarrh in some form.

Science has shown that nassl catarrh often. indicates a general weakness of the body; and local treatments in the form of snuffs and vapors do little, if any good.

To correct catarrh you should treat its cause by enriching your blood with the oil-food in Scott's Emulsion which is a medicinal food and a building-tonic, free from alcohol or any harmful drugs. Try it.

not in our inability to sdvance the ball, but in our inability to stop East Jordan's march. Cartier and Hallett were the outstanding stars of the game. Hallett nearly counted three points on a drop kick, which was made right between two East Jordan players which the line had let through. Hallett on the passing and Cartier on the receiving end, pulled off several neat passes for long gains, Cartier taking some right from the clutches of the opposing team.

After taking the ball to the goal line a costly fumble turned a certain touchdown into a touchback which was the last time we had a real chance to score.

Durance played a heady game at quarter, and Huyck, though new and not knowing the signals, made a few gains. The team was weakened by the absence of Finucan, who was ineligible.

The boys play Boyne City next Saturday. This is the most important game of the season, and the result means more to us than that of any Yale-Harvard game. Come out and help support the team and Charlevoix athletics.

SCHOOL COMMISSIONER'S NOTES

What would you do if you were county school commissioner and the eye test report kept coming in to indicate that many of our school children had less than 40 per cent of correct vision and that in many of our schools 70 per cent of the pupils have defective vision. The exact report will be printed later.

Phelps, which is Marion No. 6, is planning a program in celebration of the big event which is to take place in that district on October 20th, when they are to receive their standard plate. They will be the sixth standard school in Charlevoix county and the first standard school in Marion township.

The Angell Day programs and Columbus work was an interesting diversion in the visiting schedule this week. Our teachers are not forgetting the patriotism law in reading the Declaration of Independence on the days required by the 1915 act.

Things are moving in the county Normal room. Penmanship practiced with a vengeance. Special day program on the 13th with good reports from the same. The commissioner was sorry that work kept her elsewhere.

Are there weeds in your school grounds or just stones and sticks?

Is your heating system bothering you on these early autumn days? How's the grate? What's the matter with the chimney? Is it clean?

Hayes and Norwood visited last week. The Hayes teachers' meeting was at Maple Grove on Thursday afternoon. Every teacher present in spite of the storm. Norwood teachers' meeting was on Friday afternoon. Every teacher was present in spite of the roads.

There are six schools in Hayes township. Five of these school have ventilating systems, four of which are good, three of these schools have some adjustable seats, and two schools have the seats correctly placed and fit all sizes of children. One school has windows sufficient in quantity and correctly placed. Three schools have furnished sanitary paper towels, and two have water fountains. All but one have the approved register and all of them have some of the recommended texts. One has approved texts throughout.

There are four schools in Norwood township. Three of these have ventilating systems, two have seats to fit all of the children one of which has adjustable seats for all. There is no school in Norwood township with correct lighting, there are no sanitary paper towels and only one drinking fountain. Part of the text books could be approved and all the registers but one.

Hayes No. 5 has ordered a new water tank. The walls look pretty good.

The Murray school has the woodwork and walls tinted, and the floor oiled. A supply of new seats are at hand but all have not yet arrived. They have been correctly arranged for discipline and comfort. The grounds have been cleaned and graded and some of the new text books provided.

Hopyard has been more than busy. Just the finishing touches needed. Watch for this school later.

There was an interesting little corn exhibit at Maple Grove.

The Hilton school is equipped with all adjustable seats for the boys and girls. A new desk for the teacher has been ordered and chair to match.

Pretty soon one of two things will happen. Either the cities will sit up and take notice or the city will lose its attraction. Our boys will stay on the farm.

The following interesting letters were received this week:

Springvale, October 6, 1916.

Dear Miss Stewart:

I had the seventh and eighth grades write letters for their grammar lesson today, telling about our new plan for keeping our school room in order, combatting tuberculosis germs, and incidentally learning some civics. I selected you as a victim and told them that the best one would be mailed to you. The sender is a seventh grader.

I saw in the paper that you were wondering what was being done for the boys in the way of club work. I have only three boys but I expect to teach them what I can of manual training when we secure the proper material. We expect to start a sand table tomorrow.

Sincerely,
BESSIE ALLEN,
Springvale, Michigan,
October 6, 1916.

Commissioner May L. Stewart,
East Jordan, Michigan.

Dear Miss Stewart:

I am going to tell you what this school has been doing for the past week.

Miss Allen was reading to the pupils about what another school teacher had made out of their school room.

She read some suggestions to us and now we have turned our school room into a city.

We have named our city "Busyville."

We have elected a treasurer, clerk, street commissioner, policeman, board of health, post master and a mayor.

We play that the seats are houses and the aisles between the seats are the streets.

There is Monroe avenue, Lincoln boulevard, Wilson street, Roosevelt street, Washington avenue, and then the aisle back of all the seats is Rear Alley because it is in the rear.

I will tell you who the officers are, namely:

Treasurer—Elizabeth Green.
Clerk—Nellie Conkright.
Street commissioner — Thelma Milford.
Policeman—Foster Winberg.
Mayor—Helen Modie.
Board of health—Gladys Green.
Post master—Bertha Conkright.

We have our city much more elaborate than the one Miss Allen reads about to us.

The work of the street commissioner is much heavier than that of any other officer because she has to see that everyone's house is in perfect order, and the board of health has a heavier office than some of the rest because she has to see that everyone keeps everything out of their mouth except food and that they must breathe through the nose.

We have also formed a little club and we call it the "Busy Bee Sunshine Club." We meet every Saturday at different houses and then we expect to learn to chrochet at one meeting, and then we learn to tat at some other meeting, and at some other meeting we learn to embroidery.

We have elected officers for our little club also, they are:

President—Thelma Milford.
Vice president—Nellie Conkright.
Secretary—Helen Modie.
Treasurer—Elizabeth Green.
Chairman—Miss Allen.

We find that our club is as interesting as our city. I must close, hoping this letter will be very interesting.

Yours truly,
HELEN MODIE.

The Ironton Mothers' club met and organized Wednesday afternoon. The commissioner had the privilege of being present to take part in the discussion of home work and school credit. After an active and earnest discussion it was decided that the best results may be obtained from this work when it is well directed by both the home and the school. The racing spirit is very good for an incentive at the start but it is not desirable that any child try to earn the year's required credits during the first two months school. Whenever this will interfere with the school work or the nervous temperament of the child, regulations should be made by the teacher encouraging the children to work regularly and systematically, earning if possible the same number of credits in exactly the same manner day by day. The formation of regular and temperate habits of work is just as valuable as in habits of eating, resting or drinking. How would it be if the teachers of the county would let the children compete to see which one could follow out a definite schedule day by day for the longest period? It would be easier for the parents to keep track of and would be a splendid lesson for our boys and girls, who are the future of tomorrow.

Offer Services Free of Charge

The United Doctors Speciallst, licensed by the State of Michigan for the treatment of all diseases, including deformities, nervous and chronic diseases of men, women and children, offer to all who call on this trip, consultation, examination, advice free, making no charge whatever, except the actual cost of treatment. All that is asked in return for these valuable services is that every person treated will state the result obtained to their friends and thus prove to the sick and afflicted in every city and locality, that at last treatments have been discovered that are reasonably sure and certain in their effect.

The United Doctors are experts in the treatment of chronic disenses and so great and wonderful have been their results that in many cases it is hard to find the dividing line between skill and miracle.

Diseases of the stomach, intestines, liver, blood, skin, nerves, heart, spleen, rheumatism, sciatica, tapeworm, leg ulcers, weak lungs and those afflicted with long-standing, deep seated, chronic diseases, that have baffled the skill of the family physician, should not fail to call. Deafness often has been cured in sixty days.

According to their system no more operation for appendicitis, gall stones, tumors, goiter, piles, etc., as all cases accepted will be treated without operation or hypodermic injection, as they were among the first in America to earn the name of "Bloodless Surgeons," by doing away with the knife with blood and with all pain in the successful treatment of these dangerous diseases.

No matter what your ailment may be, no matter what others may have told you, no matter what experience you may have had with other physicians, it will be to your advantage to see them at once. Have it forever settled in your mind. If your case is incurable they will give you such advice as may relieve and stay the disease. Do not put off this duty you owe yourself or friends or relatives who are suffering because of your sickness, as a visit at this time may help you.

Worn-out and run-down men or women, no matter what your ailment may be, call, it costs you nothing.

NO ISSUES

Desperate sponsors of the administration have responded to the righteous assaults of Mr. Hughes with the vapid assertion, "He has raised no issues."

If pointing out the pitiable discrepancies of Democratic mis-government does not raise an issue, what, then, is an issue?

Unstable peace, maintained by the sacrifice of American honor where a solid peace could have been secured on creditable terms—is that an issue?

A Mexican policy which is draining the nation of hundreds of millions and getting nowhere—is that an issue?

A tariff policy which will bring the United States straight into a ruinous panic if persisted in for the next four years—is that an issue?

Unfulfilled promises regarding the cost of living, a hap-hazard, patched-up compromise on preparedness, incompetency in places of the highest responsibility—are these issues?

Obviously they are, and Charles Evans Hughes has raised them. They are issues which are apparent to every clear-thinking American and upon them he will act with determination and good judgment when voting day arrives.

President Wilson says that having been a lawyer, he can "divide a hair 'twix north and northeast side." We knew he could. He did it when he split fine distinctions to justify his violation of the single term pledge. He split some mighty fine hairs when he shook his fist and then his finger at the foreign countries that defiantly trespassed upon our rights. He split a hair every time he appointed a commission that was required to be bi-partisan. He has split many a hair in order to place deserving Democrats in office in violation of the spirit of the civil service law. When it comes to dividing hairs, whether between north and northeast, or between south and southwest, as Samuel Butler expressed it, Wilson has few peers and no superiors. The pity of it is that by precept and practice he teaches the young men and women of the country that it is wise and proper policy to take advantage of technical distinctions whenever self-interest makes it expedient.

If the public library has a copy of Woodrow Wilson's "History of the American People," some of our foreign-born fellow-citizens will find something to interest them in Volume 5, page 213, where the distinguished author says: "The Chinese were more to be desired as workmen, if not as citizens, than most of the coarse crew that came crowding in every year at the eastern ports."

Why cannot Mr. Wilson practice "watchful waiting" for a little? Why should he be so insistent in demanding to be told what Hughes will do?

HOW ABOUT YOUR SEED CORN

ARE YOU READY FOR NEXT YEAR'S PLANTING?

If You Have Not Made Your Selection There May Be Time Yet—Better Late Than Never.

Corn is the most important crop. Next year's yield will depend first of all upon how well the seed is selected and stored this fall. Well matured ears selected from strong, vigorous stalks represent the first great step in profitable corn production. Then provide for next year's crop by selecting the seed this fall.

In the first place the ears should be picked from the field while the corn is still standing. As an average of a number of tests the Ohio experiment station found that seed selected from standing stalks produced 3 1-4 bushels more per acre than the same seed picked from the wagon during husking.

In picking seed corn only well matured ears should be selected. Heavy weight ears have exceeded medium or light weight ears by more than five bushels per acre.

Vigor of the Plant.

The vigor of the plant is also well worth considering in the selection of seed corn. There is abundant evidence that vigor in the corn plant is hereditary. Seed picked from a weak plant is likely to produce other weak plants. The Ohio experiment station conducted a breeding plot in 1906 in which the rows were planted from individual ears. In two rows growing side by side one had 56 per cent and the other 49 per cent of its plants broken over before harvest. Between, and upon either side of these were other rows of which, in one instance, not a single plant, and in two others, 3 and 6 per cent only were broken. The ability to stand upright did not result from a lighter load, for the ear of which 56 per cent of the progeny broke over yielded 75 bushels per acre, while the ear having every plant upright yielded over 100 bushels per acre. Under vigor, leaf development, stockiness, the position of the ear on the stalk, and freedom from disease should be considered.

At corn-ripening time drop all other business and select an abundance of seed corn. Let "abundance" mean enough for two years. If every corn grower would select twice as much seed as needed there would be no occasion for the condition we found ourselves in last spring.

When selecting seed corn give the process your entire attention. Get the very best there is and preserve it well and the increased yield will pay a greater profit than any other work than can be done on the farm. Pick from the stalks that have produced the most corn without having any special advantage of space, moisture, or fertility. Avoid the large ears on stalks standing singly with an unusual amount of space around them. Preference should be given the plants that have produced most heavily in competition with a full stand of less productive plants. Late-maturing plants with ears which are heavy because of an excessive amount of sap should be ignored.

Treat Seed Immediately.

The same day seed corn is picked it should be husked and the ears put in a dry place where there is free circulation of air and placed in such a manner that they do not touch each other.

Winter Storage of Seed Corn.

After the corn is thoroughly dry it should be put away in a dry place where the temperature is fairly constant and not too cold. Some farmers place the thoroughly dry ears in the center of a grain bin and fill the bin with dry wheat or oats. Any place that is dry and not too cold will preserve the seed corn in good condition.

CHAPTER III.

Three Quarters and Six Eighths.

SATURDAY morning dawned as hot and dry and windless as had been the other daye of the week which had preceded it. Caleb Hunter, rising from an uneasy night, blamed bis sleeplessness upon the weather. It was fully an hour before his usual not too esrly honr of rising when bn slowly descended the wide stairway, and yet he was but little surprised to find the boy already there before him seated upon the top step of the veranda when he strolled outside.

Chin in palm, elbow upon knee, Steve was gazing fixedly in the direction of Dexter Allison's stucco and timber "summer lodge," and, although Caleb could not have known it, there bad been no need for his silence, for the boy's rapt preoccupntion was sound proof. Caleb heard voices coming from behind the shrubbery, and just as he, a little perplexed, turned to follow the direction of that fascinated gaze Allison himself squeezed through a narrow aperture in tha hox hedge and hailed him jovially from the far edge of the lawn. And Caleb Hunter's brows drew together in a hit of a frown when a slendnr figure in kilted black velvet and bright buckled low shoes, hatless and with thick, gleaming hair bobbed short in n style strange to Morrison in those days flashed through behind him, for Caleb heard the short gasp which came from the hoy's lips even before the little girl had paused in her darting advance on tiptoe like a hovering butterfly to wave n alim hand at him.

Caleb heard the hoy's breath suck in between tight teeth; heard it quiver unsteadily as she appenred on swift feet—and Caleb understood what had been holding so closely his attention. Ha understood absolntely and yet, strange as the mood was, at that moment he couldn't help hut feel, too, somehow a little sorry for the hoy—he could not help hut think— His eyes went from Steve's forward thrust head, from the hair, shaggy and unkempt for all its fineness and thickness and wavy softness, across to that dainty vision which, poised in her absurdly short skirt like a point of flame, was already gazing hack at the hoy upon the steps in open and undisguised amaze.

All of that charucteristic which had been most pronounced in Dexter Allison thn latter had passed down to this slender girl who was his daughter, Barbara. No matter how vivid Allison's raiment had been, Caleb remembered that even when Dexter was a stripling at school it had always seemed more a pert of the man himself then just protection for his body. Caleb had naver given it a serious thought np to that moment, hut now it came back to him with added cumulative force. He recollected that he had often wondered at the child's unconscious adaptation of mood to the clothes she happened to be wearing. He recalled how he had seen her demure and distant in misty, pastel tinted party frocks or quaintly, infantilely dignified in soberer Sunday morning garb.

Caleb caught his first illuminating glimpse of the woman she was to be—of the dainty grace and more than usual beauty which were there in the promise of the years, and he, who was fond of insisting to his sister Sarah that there was many a boy back in those hills who, with his chance, might some day achieve greatness, suddenly realized how long and weary the road would be for just such n one as the fascinated little figure on thn steps before he could begin to approach that level which, to a society that Caleb understood, was typified by this exquisite elfin figure. Dexter Allison's daughter.

He was no snob, Caleb Hunter, and yet the little girl's bearing at that moment doubly accented for him tha gulf which lay between her and the hills boy, by name Steve. For, though she did pause to stare at his white drill trousers and unbelievable men aized boots with frankly childish astonishment, the next instant she had recovered herself and without another glance preceded her father across the grass. Quite as though Steve had not been there at all, sha passed him to hesitate demurely at Caleb's side.

"Good morning, Uncle Cal," she greeted him.

And then quite suddenly Caleb didn't feel so very sorry, after all, for his little visitor. He stopped pitying him. Steve's eyes had not wavered once from the little girl's face, from the time shn appeared in the hedge gap until she mounted the steps, utterly oblivious to his nearness. But when she brushed against his elbow the boy rose and stood, hat in hand, gravely quiet, gravely possessed and silently sure of himself.

Even after he had answered Barbara Allison's greeting and turned with his grown up, ponderous courtesy to present the boy to her, only to be left with the words hanging upon tongue tip by her instant disappearance inside in search of Sarah, Caleb caught no hint of the thoughts behind those impassive and steady eyes. And yet he knew that Steve had risen in order that he might how as he had the night before, when Caleb introduced him to his sister.

Dexter Allison, coming up in less airy fashion across the lawn, surprised Caleb with his mouth still open.

"Well?" said Dexter Allison—and Caleb recovered himself.

"Well?" he countered, and then they both laughed softly and shook hands. It was their unvaried formula of greeting, whether they had not seen each other for twenty-four hours or twenty-four months.

And while they were shaking hands the hoy turned quickly and reseated himself upon the top step. But Allison gave him more notice than had his daughter Barbara. He stood with his hands in his pockets, gazing at the averted face, unconcealed and growing amusement in the scrutiny, until Caleb, not yet aware of the boy's wooda taught habit of seeing while seeming not to see, was simultaneously annoyed at Allison's fatuous grin and glad of the fact that Steve, apparently was looking the other way. After a time Allison raised quizzical eyes to Caleb's face.

"Wel-l-l?" he intoned, and with a little reluctance as reasonable as it was unnoticed Caleb answered the inferred question.

"This—this is a little friend of mine, Dexter," he said—"down from the hills. He's to have a look at the city which you have been so instrumental in arousing in its present state of teeming activity. This is Stephen O'Mara. Steve—this is Mr. Allison, Steve!"

Then the boy turned and again rose to his feet, and at that moment Caleb could have hugged him for his deliberation. The hoy inclined his head; he bowed, without a word. And it was Dexter Allison who first offered a hand.

"Glad to make your acquaintance, Stephen," the latter exclaimed with quite violent good humor. "And how are you?"

Steve took the hand and closed his brown fingers hard upon the puffy white ones. For an instant he stood, his eyes, grave and inscrutable, full upon Allison's smaller ones.

"I'm tol-lable," he drawled soberly. "And—haow he you—yourself?"

Allison gasped, stood with mouth agape and then burst into one of his rather too frequent, too hearty laughs.

"Well, I'm"— he begon his favorite phrase of ejaculation, and then stopped to look down again into the small face before him. "Well, I'm"— and he stopped to chuckle. Then he turned back to Caleb.

"I suppose, Cal, you know what this early morning call presages?" he suggested.

Caleb recalled himself with an effort from a contemplation of the sudden, prideful something which had warmed him while Steve was shaking hands. He smiled mechanically.

The Boy Rose and Stood Hat in Hand, Gravely Quiet.

"I suppose it's the usual raid upon the commissary," he answered.

Allison mounted heavily to the veranda.

"Right!" he exclaimed. "Right! You'll notice that Barbara has already gone on ahead. She's the skirmish line—scouts—videttes—whatever you please to call 'em. There's no one up yet—none of the family—over to our place. We are hungry, Cal. I hope this is waffle morning."

Caleb smiled at him, less impersonality in the mirth. It was a regular custom, this truancy of Barbara Allison and her father—one of the little human foibles which Caleb often told himself accounted, in part at least, for his real liking of the man.

"Waffles it is," he said, and he turned toward the boy.

"Would you mind finding Miss Sarah, Steve?" he asked. "Will you tell her, please, that we are to be subjected to another neighborly imposition?"

After the boy had disappeared Caleb followed the larger man to a chair. And this time it was Caleb who met Allison's silence with a challenging, "Well?"

"Where did you get him, Cal?" Allison demanded. "Where did you get him? Those shoes and those trousers—pants, I guess is the word, eh? And, say, how that little beggar did squeeze my hand! Look here!"

He held one soft hand up for inspection. There were faint red welts still visible across the finger joints.

"Friend of yours, did you say?"

Without stopping to think about it, Caleb was not so keen to enlarge upon the boy's obvious "points" as he had been with Sarah. He omitted to mention his thoughts of the night before, and he omitted any reference to Old Tom, except for the most hazy explanation that the boy had no immediate kin. But with an increasing eagerness he dilated upon the small foot traveler's first view of the "city," his breathless reception of Allison's own switch engine and his avowed intention to "look around a trifle" before he located something to do.

"I thought I'd take him down this morning and get McLean to give him a ride in the cab of one of those sheet iron steam relics of yours," he finished.

If Caleb had expected his unadorned recitation of the boy's appearance to make any impression upon his hearer he would have been disappointed. But without any confessed reason for so doing Caleb aimed rather at the opposite effect. And Allison turned from it with a large, matter of fact indifference to rise and bow to Sarah Hunter, who appeared that moment in the doorway.

"Surely—surely," he echoed Caleb's suggestion. "Take him down and give him a ride. McLean 'll be glad of the chance to show some one his pet buzzsawa and things. I'll walk down with you myself after breakfast. I may be away for a day or two, and I want to leave directions for changes to be incorporated while I'm gone."

At the table that morning Caleb noted that there was no hesitation in Steve's selection from the silver beside his plate, no waiting to follow in the lead of Sarah Hunter's choice. He noticed, too, that the boy's eyes did not once lift to those of Barbara Allison, opposite him. And, while the little girl from time to time joined in the conversation, he not once opened his mouth to speak until they were almost ready to rise from their places.

Barbara Allison insisted upon joining the excursion down to the mill that morning. She developed a sudden and unshakable resolve to be one of the party, and after his remonstrances had finally brought stormy tears to her eyes Allison surrendered in perplexity to her whim.

"All right, then," he gave in. "If you want to come as much as all that, but—but you—now, run along, then, with Stephen."

On the way down the hill he voiced his perplexity to Caleb.

"When it comes to dealing with men," he said, "I pride myself upon being able to go back rather incisively to first motives. But the other sex is beyond me. She's always turned up her dainty nose at the noise and dirt before, and—and now she's ready to cry because I suggest that she wait with Miss Sarah until we return."

Caleb's eyes rested upon thn oddly matched little couple ahead in the road. The boy was carrying his battered hat in his hand, but Barbara walked with small head up, without a single glance for her escort. Caleb, noting that Steve's head was forward thrust, knew that his eyes must be fastened hungrily upon the town in the valley, and he understood the reason for the disdainful tilt of the little girl's chin, for even at the age of ten Barbara Allison was not accustomed to inattention. Caleb smiled rather covertly for him.

"I never knew but one woman whose motives were absolutely transparent," he mused. "And she—she was the most uninteresting, unsuccessful female person I ever did know."

As Allison had promised, they found McLean, the white haired mill superintendent, only too eager at the prospect of an audience for one of his voluble tours of the premises. But when Caleb had explained the main errand upon which they had come, after a long, keen scrutiny of the boy's face, the burly riverman led the way without a word to a wheezing old two wheeler in thn piling yard.

"So you'll be wantin' to take a spin in one av me engines, is it?" he asked then, and after a moment, "An' do you think you'll be able to hang on whin she gets to r-rollin'?"

Steve's eyes were like bits of polished steel, so bright they were. It was a struggle for him to take them even for a moment from the engine before him.

"I can't-ete I kin," he quavered.

"Well, thin, we'll see." McLean looked up and winked at the engineer in the diminutive cab. "It's car-reful you'll be, Misther Engineer," he cautioned, "an' watch your steerin' on the cur-rves!"

He leaned over to lift the boy to the running board, but Steve, with one foot upraised, hung back. He faced toward Caleb and without a glance in the girl's direction said:

"Mebby she—mebby she'd like to go too?"

Barbara Allison, chin lifted a little higher, half wheeled and slipped her hand within that of her father.

"Thank you, but I don't care to," she refused.

Steve caught the little tose of her head from the corner of his eye, and his face went pink. Without another

"AM CERTAINLY DELIGHTED. TANLAC HAS DONE MORE FOR ME THAN ANYTHING"

"I suffered from stomach trouble for a long time, had severe headaches and pains in my back and cramps in my stomach. These pains would usually come on after I had eaten, but occasionally would come without any apparent cause.

"I was quite nervous too, and always felt tired and listless. Some days I would have no energy at all. I slept poorly at nights and would wake up in the mornings feeling all worn out.

"I saw Tanlac so highly indorsed by so many people I decided to take it myself and now I am certainly delighted to see a great improvement in my condition. Tanlac has done more for me than anything, as now I feel better than I have in a long time and have gotten back my strength and energy.

"My stomach is in good condition and my headaches have disappeared," was the statement made by Miss Ora Patrick, of 31 Franklin Avenue, Grand Rapids.

Tanlac, the national tonic, is prepared from roots, barks and herbs, and is nature's own remedy and has been publicly indorsed by over 250,000 people who have been relieved of stomach troubles, indigestion, accumulation of gas, nervousness, sleeplessness, rheumatism, catarrhal and kidney affections and has made them feel young and vigorous again and renewed their strength and ambition.

TANLAC CAN BE OBTAINED HERE ONLY AT THE STORE OF B. A. HERMAN.

Tanlac can also be obtained at store of W. A. Hyslop at Boyne City.

Fire Destroys Barn.

A barn belonging to A. P. Cook, of Deer Lake, was entirely destroyed by fire last Friday morning about five o'clock. The flames were discovered just as the family arose in the morning but despite the fact that neighbors came to their assistance, the building was entirely consumed. The origin of the fire is unknown.

The barn was a large one and was built a few years ago at a cost of more than $1,500. In the barn was 1 cow, 2 horses, an auto, 15 tons of hay besides pumpkins, squash, apples and various other articles of produce. The cow and the horses were removed without serious injury and the auto was damaged to the extent of the top and the cushions being burned.

Mr. Cook was badly burned about the head and face while fighting the flames.

This is a heavy loss when you stop to consider that most of the produce the family possessed were in the barn.

The loss will total in round numbers, building and contents, in the neighborhood of $5,000 and the insurance is very nearly nothing in comparison.

Gasoline Launch Burns.

The gasoline launch, "Traveller," owned by John Streeter, caught fire in midlake on Friday evening of last week and blew up before the flames could be extinguished. Streeter, who was driving the boat, but barely escaped with his life.

In the afternoon Streeter took the boat out with some friends and it caught fire. The flames were immediately discovered and beat out before spreading. On a later trip to Inman's, near Advance, with Streeter alone in the boat, it again caught fire and spread too rapidly to be exhausted.

Sounding bell and horn, the boat was headed for the shore. Inman saw the fire from his place and set out in a rowboat to the rescue. He reached the boat and took Streeter in with him. They had just left the launch when the flames reached the gasoline tank, the ensuing explosion sending it to the bottom.

WALKER SCHOOL NOTES

(Norma Sherman, Editor.)

We are enjoying the nice fall weather.

The school was visited by Mrs. Spidle last Friday afternoon.

The third grade have learned the poem, "September," and is now learning "October."

There are 29 in our school that have gotten a week's start toward a "Certificate of Award," for being neither absent nor tardy for the second month.

The temperance rally, Tuesday evening, was poorly attended because of the rainy weather. Rev. Walker, orchestra and quartette from Charlevoix were here in spite of the rain. The meeting was postponed until Wednesday evening, October 18.

Couldn't Beat Uncle Hi.

Uncle Hiram, from Podunk, was taken by his nephew into a downtown hashery for lunch.

"I guess I'll have some coffee and sinkers," said the nephew.

"Did you say sinkers?" asked the old man.

"I sure did, uncle."

"Waal," said Uncle Hiram as his eye fell on a spaghetti eater, "I reckon I'll have a mess of fishin' lines like that there feller is eatin' out of a bowl."—Boston Transcript.

VAN PELT'S TRIP CONTINUED

Troy, New York, Sunday September 24, 1916. Thus far, our trip has been one of perfect satisfaction and joy—the weather pleasant all our way across the Empire state. Even our trip by boat from Detroit to Buffalo, was quiet, calm and peaceful. No frost as yet. Corn is being cut, mostly by machine. Apple crop fair, except in spots. I am now in my own old city. It has changed but little. In fact, it has now 1,800 less inhabitants than it had at the last census.

Monday, September 25, 1916. Still in Troy, being held here to have our springs mended. In the forenoon we went to Albany, where I spent a few years in business before going to Chicago, 50 years ago. I only saw one man that I knew and who assisted me while I was in business there. The p. m. we spent getting promises—that our car would be ready at one o'clock, two o'clock, four o'clock and six o'clock.

Tuesday, September 26, 1916. Left Troy 7:45 a. m. Drove over splendid roads, 50 miles to Stockbridge, Mass. Had a bang up good dinner at the Red Lion Inn, a good rest of two hours and then off for home, via Hudson, New York. We found this a most charming trip and no one unfamiliar with this part of the country ought to miss it. One might say this entire trip is in over and among the beautiful Berkshires. Stockbridge is rich in historic lore. Here were the Stockbridge Indians, whose conclaves beneath the great trees were held in the seventeenth century. They have erected a monolith of native stone on the Indian burial ground, on which is inscribed, "The ancient burial place of the Stockbridge Indians, the Friends of Our Fathers, 1734-1877.

In 1750, Jonathan Edwards, Mrs. Van Pelt's great, great, great grandfather, lived for a term of years. He was driven out of Northhampton as a heretic and while in Stockbridge, he wrote "The Freedom of the Will," a book highly prized by the old time Christians. Many interesting things are to be seen and learned here. In fact, they are talking concrete roads here as well as we are in Charlevoix. In fact they are in and have been in very much the same condition that that has been our lot in Charlevoix, our own beautiful little city. The Berkshire district is not only nationally historic for its beauty, but has an international reputation, as well, as many foreigners have been accustomed to visit these hills and mountains and they are free to say that even Switzerlund or Italy does not excell this part of our country.

The rich people of New York and other places come here and have bought many beautiful sites and have built very expensive mansions, which they call cottages. In fact, this whole part of the country is filled with just such places. The land is poor and it is hard work to make a living off from it, but it is rich in scenery and when a rich man wants a thing, he has the money and can and does buy it—especially when a home is concerned and he can make a show and outdo some other fellow. Some of these macadam roads have been resurfaced three or four times until they are now quite high above the level of the sides of the road and, being oiled, cars are quite apt to skid. Up until today we have remarked how very few cars we have seen by the roadside having tire trouble, but this was surely a corker, the number being either 16 or 17 and yours truly was among the victims.

We have already passed our first 1,000 miles with the car, and are all still alive and kicking—especially if we do not get a good room with a bath and something good to eat.

Yours,

VAN PELT.

P. S. Don't forget, we are going to build about one hundred (100) miles of concrete road next year, and that it must be built good, for unless it is built good it will be bad, but when perfectly built, it is the only road. They all admit it here, and today I saw great rows of apple trees alongside the road, loaded with big red apples.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

word he clambered up beside the driver, and the engine rolled out of the yard and went clanking down the uneven, crooked track, leaving a dissolving trail of steam behind. When it returned the little face at the cab window was tense and somewhat pale beneath its tan, but the hand upon the throttle beside the engineer's lay steady as a little pine knot.

"Well, an' what do you think av her?" McLean demanded with an assumption of anxiety as the boy dropped to the ground.

Steve turned and patted the footboard with a proprietary hand. As grave of men as his questioner he bobbed his head.

"She—she certainly kin git up and step," he volunteered. And then, cocking his head judiciously, "I'll hev to be a-gittin' me ons of them fer myself some day!"

McLean chuckled—he chuckled in deep delight within his white whiskers

"Mebby she—mebby she'd like to go too?"

—and led the way to the mills. But once there the amusement in his eyes rapidly deepened to amazement, for there were few steps in the processes upon which the boy could not talk as fluently and technically as did the mill boss himself. And he knew timber—know it with the same infallibility which had even in McLean always seemed to border upon the uncanny.

It was Allison himself who first called attention to an unsawed log which was being discarded.

"That looks like too good a stick to be wasted, doesn't it, McLean?" he asked.

Before McLean could answer the boy spat gravely into a pile of sawdust, his piping voice rising above the shrill scream of the saws.

"She's holler," he stated succinctly "Dry rotten above the stub!"

And when Allison raised his brows interrogatively McLean dropped one hand upon the boy's shoulder, a bit of pride in the gesture.

"Holler she is," he agreed, and he added, "An' I'll be afther knowin' where to find a riverman av the old school, I'm thinkin', some day when the need arises."

MUST MAKE SEWER CONNECTIONS

COUNCIL PLACES BAN ON OPEN TOILETS

Petition Presented Asking Postponement of Election of Charter Commission—Other Business

On a petition signed by W. E. Hampton and six or seven others, asking the council to postpone the election of the charter commission until after the proposition of a general revision had been voted upon, was presented to the council and by it accepted, and the necessary resolution was adopted, deferring the election of the charter commission.

The council also passed the necessary resolutions to amend the city charter for the purpose of raising two and a half cents on one hundred dollars or 1-4 of a mill on the assessed valuation of the city of Charlevoix, which will raise about six hundred dollars for the purpose of advertising the advantages of the city. This resolution, in accordance with the law, was laid on the table for 30 days, and will be voted upon at the spring primaries.

The council also passed a resolution, reciting the facts that the council room was to be used solely by the city clerk, city officials and the general public having business with the municipal corporation. This was deemed necessary, inasmuch as the work in the city clerk's office is very heavy and the deputy clerk is obliged to work nights and that he cannot be disturbed if the work is kept up.

The council also passed the necessary resolutions for a sewer in the third ward on Lincoln street. It might be said in connection with the putting in of new sewers that within a very short time the board of health of the state of Michigan will absolutely cause all open toilets to be discontinued and that the people will be obliged to either connect with the sewer or put in private cesspools. By putting in the sewers the burden is more evenly distributed, covering a period of five years, whereas if a householder is obliged to put in a cesspool the cost of the same has to be paid when the work is finished, making it a heavier burden at the time.

From the council proceedings, one can see that action is being taken to compel householders to connect their premises with the sewers, wherever a sewer has been constructed in the street in front or alongside of their premises and if the householders will not do this the city will do it for them and charge the same up against them the same as taxes.

Henry Ribbie and William Murphy were selected to choose sides for the tug o' war, and were allowed 15 men on a side. Ribble's side won the prize, a box of cigars given by Lee Murphy.

The ball game was a grand old "farmers game" with Fred Johnson and Irving Bancroft choosing sides. Johnson's side won the prize of a box of cigars given by G. W. Kitzman and $2.00 in cash by R. Mackey.

The other field sports on the program were carried out to a finish with lots of "pep." The crowd was one of the largest at an event of this kind and thoroughly enjoyed the day. The dance in the evening was also well attended.

SPEECH OF THEODORE ROOSEVELT AT WILKES-BARRE, PA.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1916

I have accepted the invitation to come to Wilkes-Barre to discuss the Adamson law, because Wilkes-Barre is the headquarters of the great industry in connection with which I myself as president was brought into close and intimate touch with the labor movement in this country. If what I have to say is of any value it must be not only because it represents what in the abstract is right, but also because in the concrete I applied, in actual practice, when I had power, the principles which I criticize Mr. Wilson for not applying now. Therefore, I wish to recapitulate to you just what occurred in connection with the anthracite coal strike and to contrast it with what Mr. Wilson has done in connection with the law for the increase of wages on railroads.

At the outset, I wish to express my very hearty admiration for the Brotherhoods. I am proud of the fact that I am an honorary member of one of them. I have usually been in entire sympathy with them. While I held public office I found myself in the vast majority of cases able to support them in their demands, because these demands were right. But now they have demanded legislation raising their wages to be taken without investigation and without the exercise of that form of judgment shown by a competent arbitration commission; and such a demand is wrong, and I stand against it because it is wrong, exactly as I have stood against the demands of bankers and lawyers, and mine-owners and railroad presidents when they were wrong. I believe in labor unions. I am proud that I am myself an honorary member of a labor union. But I believe first of all in the Union to which all of us belong, the union of all the people of the whole United States.

In the case of the settlement of the anthracite coal strike, the action I took was of precisely the kind which President Wilson now says the law should make obligatory in all similar cases in the future. But Mr. Wilson himself admits that his own action was so bad that it ought never to be repeated, for he has assured the public that although Congress has adjourned without doing anything, it is his intention when Congress meets to see that it does something to render it impossible for another President ever to repeat exactly what he has just done. In other words, I stood and stand by my action as the proper action, constituting the proper precedent for future action. Mr. Wilson himself confesses that his action was wrong and that the precedent thereby set is so evil that legislation must be enacted rendering it impossible for another President ever to repeat, the action.

There is another point of difference and a vital point. The action I took was intended to meet the situation at once. The action that Mr. Wilson took has been deferred so that it shall not take place until considerably after election.

Fourteen years ago the great anthracite coal strike had occurred in this region. From the beginning I put the governmental agents in touch with the situation and kept myself thoroughly informed so that I should be able to act immediately if it became necessary for me to act. I hoped that it would not be necessary, and that the parties themselves would come to an agreement; for I was very loath to interfere if it could be avoided. But cold weather approached, a coal famine menaced the entire eastern section of the United States, and there was not the slightest symptom of an agreement being reached by the contending parties. I felt that the time had come for me to act. On the one side were the greatest and wealthiest mine-owners of the country, intimately connected with the wealthiest and most powerful industrial and railroad corporations in the country. The financial strength of Wall Street was behind them. These men absolutely refused to arbitrate. They said there was nothing to arbitrate, that I had no power under the Constitution to act, and that the public could not interfere, nor the representatives of the public, with the way in which they managed their business. The representatives of the mine workers, of labor, on the contrary, expressed their entire willingness to arbitrate and demanded nothing except that as one of the conditions of arbitration there should be some representative of organized labor to sit together with the representatives of capital and of the public at large. I made every effort to get the two sides to agree. When I failed, I decided that I would act myself. I held that where the public necessity was national and imperative it became the duty of the Chief of the Nation to act. I held that in any such gigantic controversy between labor and capital, containing such a threat to the welfare of the great body of our people, there were three parties in interest: viz., the capitalist, the workingmen, and the people as a whole; and that where the public need was vital that need must control.

I held, moreover, that in any case of such importance and such interest we must have full knowledge before final action on any of the points at issue was taken, and that this knowledge must be obtained by an unbiased body of arbitrators after a thorough study of the situation. I held that the power of Government must be used to make effective the findings of this body, and that pending the findings the work of mining must go on because the public need demanded it. Therefore, I decided that I would use the entire power of the nation to see that there was an arbitration by dispassionate experts, and that the conclusions of that arbitration were accepted by both sides, and that until their decision was rendered the work of mining should go on in the interests of the people as a whole. When the mine owners, backed by and representing the most powerful financial interests of the country, positively refused to arbitrate, I proceeded to appoint an arbitration commission without regard to them; securing the consent of a political opponent, ex-President Grover Cleveland, to serve at the head of that commission. I saw the Lieutenant General of the Army and arranged with him that if necessary I would put the army in possession of the mines and would treat him as a receiver to run the mines, and see that neither side interfered with the running. When it became evident that I meant what I said, that both sides could count on my endeavor to do strict justice, and that they could also count on my insisting that the public needs be immediately met, the capitalists yielded and the commission was appointed.

You know the rest, you miners here! Work was resumed in the mines immediately, on the old terms, which continued until the commission reported. The Commission consisted of as able and as impartial men as there were in the country, including the head of the Order of Railway Conductors, Mr. Clark. It also included among others, a Federal Judge, a skilled engineer, a trained labor expert and a beloved friend of mine, Archbishop Spaulding, of Illinois, whose interest in the welfare of the workingmen was genuine and sympathetic, and also understood with entire clearness that in the long run justice to the workingmen could be permanently secured, only if it was made part of a scheme to secure justice for everybody concerned.

The arbitration was successful. I understand that with slight modifications, you have continued to operate the mines under its terms up to the present day. More important still, it set the precedent for the course that ought to be followed in all disputes of this nature hereafter. Mr. Wilson, on the contrary, has set a precedent which he himself admits must never hereafter be followed if justice is to be done. This is a vital point of difference between the conduct of the Chief Executive in one case and in the other. When fourteen years ago, I acted, there was no precedent for me to follow, and no established instrumentalities through which to work. I had to establish the precedent in order to meet a great crisis. I had to create my own instrument, the arbitration commission. Mr. Wilson had before him the precedent I had created, and he had as instruments ready to hand the Arbitration Board, and the Interstate Commerce Commission, with its enlarged powers. But he failed to follow the precedent, or to use the instruments which were ready to his hand. I, although lacking the agencies of law for the application of the principle, nevertheless applied it, and established arbitration in the settlement on their merits of industrial disputes. Mr. Wilson, with all the agencies of law subject to his command, ignored them, destroyed the principle of arbitration in the settlement of industrial disputes, and put a premium on securing this settlement by threat and duress.

President Wilson in his speech of August 29th and September 23d has furnished his own condemnation out of his own mouth. In them he explicitly condemns exactly what he has done and actually demands legislation which will make impossible the repetition of such a proceeding! This is so extraordinary an attitude that I quote his own words. He said he wished "to provide against "the recurrence of such unhappy situations in the future" by securing "the calm and fair arbitration of all industrial disputes in the days to come." This is an explicit assertion that arbitration of all industrial disputes is the right method of action; and therefore that he had adopted the wrong method of action—although in the case of the anthracite coal strike he had an exact precedent in point, by following which he would have enforced the right method.

President Wilson further says, "This is assuredly the best way of vindicating a principle, namely, having failed to make certain of its observance in the present to make certain of its observance in the future." On the contrary, this is the very worst way of vindicating a principle. Indeed, it is impossible to devise a worse way of vindicating a principle, than to flinch ignominiously from enforcing it in the case at issue and at the same time to seek to cover the ignominy by vociferous protestations about applying it in the nebulous future. The same paper, the New York Times, from which I quote the above sentences, contained statements from the leaders of the Brotherhoods whom he was befriending, in which they said that they would never consent to the legislation providing for future arbitration for which President Wilson asked; and President Wilson kept a weak and nervous silence about this defiance. He did not get the legislation which he declared was essential to "vindicate the principle" in the future. All that he accomplished was the violation of the principle at the present, in the concrete case at issue. The only law he secured establishes the precedent of violation of the principle. All that he did was to establish the most evil of all precedents for a democracy, the precedent of violating a principle under the duress of threat and menace. It is a precedent which will return to plague us throughout all future time whenever we have in the White House a President who is timid in the face of threat of physical violence or who subordinates duty to the hope of personal political profit.

President Wilson further said, while trying to gloss over his timidity in the present by assuming an attitude of frowning defiance as regards the nebulous future, that the American people must be made "a partner in the settlement of disputes that interrupt the life of the nation," that it must "enforce the partnership and see to it that no organization is stronger than that organization to which we all belong, our own Government," and that we, the people, must say to any outside organization that it "must not interrupt the National life without consulting us." These are fine words about the future. They are intended to cover up, but as a matter of fact, they furnish the strongest condemnation of Mr. Wilson's deed in the present. In these words Mr. Wilson exactly describes what he ought to have done with the Brotherhoods, and explicitly condemns the action which he in fact took. If the principles he laid down were good for the future, they were good for the present. Do it now, Mr. Wilson! Do not use fine words about what somebody else ought to do in the future in order to cover your own shameful abandonment of duty in the present.

Mr. Wilson has adroitly maintained that the question at issue was the eight-hour day. This is not all fact. The question at issue was the question of wages. The law does not say that there shall be an eight-hour day. It says that eight hours shall "be made the measure of a day's work for the purpose of receiving compensation." In other words, it was primarily an increase of wages and not a diminution of hours that was aimed at.

I believe in the eight-hour day. It is the ideal toward which we should trend. But I believe that there must be common sense as well as common honesty in achieving the ideal. Mr. Wilson has laid down the principle that there is something sacred about the eight-hour day which makes it improper even to discuss it. If this is so, if it is applied universally, then Mr. Wilson is not to be excused for not applying it immediately where he has complete power, and that is in his own household. If the principle of the eight-hour day is sacred and not to be changed under any circumstances, then the housemaid, who in Mr. Wilson's house arises at seven must be left off at three in the afternoon; and if Mr. Wilson's butler is kept up after a State dinner until ten, he must not come on until two of the following afternoon, and no hired man on a farm must get up to milk the cows in the morning unless he quits work before milking time arrives that same evening. Of course, the simple truth is that under one set of conditions an eight-hour law may be too long or at least may represent the very maximum of proper work; whereas there may be other conditions under which a man working more than eight hours one day gets one or two days of complete leisure following, or where the work is intermittent throughout the day, or is of so easy or varied a type that no exhaustion accompanies it, or where a rush of work for a few days will be compensated by complete leisure on certain other days. It is ridiculous to say that an engineer of a high-speed train under especially difficult conditions, an engineer of a low-speed train, under very much easier conditions, a farm laborer in harvest time, a man engaged as a watchman through the quiet work of the night, or a man engaged in the exhausting work of a steel puddler in a continuous seven-days-a-week, night and day industry, should be governed by precisely the same rule, or by the same rigid application in detail of a sound general principle.

I heartily believe in a proper limitation by law of hours of work in the railroad service, and I recommended legislation to that effect when I was President. I believe in the wages in any industry being just as high as it is possible to make them without injustice to the capital invested and to the public which is served. But it is a mere truism to say that it is impossible to get this ideal achieved unless an honest and dispassionate effort is first made by the proper commission to ascertain the full facts in the particular case. As regards the railroads, we have to consider the wages paid to the different classes of employees, the interest on the investment, the earning power of the road, and the kind of service that must be rendered to the public. It is impossible to secure a proper solution of the problem unless all these factors are considered. Mr. Wilson absolutely declined to consider any of them. He declined even to ask what they were. We have not at this moment one particular of trustworthy information which will enable us to decide whether the demands of the men were just or not. I wish it distinctly understood that I am not trying to pass judgment upon the justice of the case. I regard the engineers, firemen and enginemen and trainmen generally as doing peculiarly responsible and arduous work, and entitled to particular consideration as regards both hours of labor and pay. I hope that they are fully entitled as a matter of justice to what they will receive under the Adamson bill and if it so appears I shall heartily support it. But I protest against the far-reaching evil of the precedent set in the method which has been followed. We are denied knowledge. We see Congress forced to act under threats. I protest against any law passed under such duress. I protest against the case being decided without giving each party its day in court, and above all without giving the public its day in court. I hope the demands of the men were just, and would have been proved so to be, if investigated before a competent body. But I explicitly protest against any action by the Government when no investigation has been held to see whether the claims are or are not just, and when they are granted through fear and not as a matter of right.

Remember it is the public that in the end will pay. You do not have to take my assertion for this. Take the assertion of Mr. Wilson's master in this matter. The Union leaders, through their Chairman, Mr. Garretson, announced that "they would steadily refuse to arbitrate and that in their action they were supported by the President of the United States." They stated their case in a nutshell as follows:

"In times like this, men go back to primal instinct—to the day of the caveman with his half-gnawed bone, snarling at the over caveman who wanted to take his bone away. We leaders are fighting for our men. The railroads are fighting for their stockholders; and the shippers for themselves. And the public will pay." Mr. Garretson is right—the public will pay. And it will pay without having had the chance to know whether it ought or ought not to pay. Mr. Wilson betrayed the public when he refused to insist that the contest should be decided on principles of justice, and when he permitted it to be decided in deference to greed and fear. Mr. Wilson announced that it was "futile" to stand firmly against these improper demands. It would not have been futile if a Democrat of the stamp of Andrew Jackson or Grover Cleveland had been President. The futility inhered solely in Mr. Wilson himself. If President Wilson had stood by the honor and the interests of the United States in this matter; if he had insisted upon a full investigation before action; if he had insisted upon arbitration and had announced that if there was any attempt to tie up the traffic of the United States he would use the entire power of the United States to keep the arteries of traffic open, I would have applauded him and supported him. But, to take such action needed courage. It needed disinterestedness. It was necessary that the man taking it should put duty to the nation first, and political and personal considerations last. What President Wilson did was to permit the overriding of justice by appeals to brute force.

(To be continued next week.)

CLOSES SUCCESSFUL SEASON

FINE RECORD MADE BY LOCAL SALTING STATION

Crop Has Proven to Be a Profitable One for Farmers of This Region.

The local plant of the William Bros. Co., of Detroit, has made an exceptionally fine record the past year. With a somewhat decreased acreage over previous years, caused by bad luck in growing the cukes, the showing this year stamps the pickle as one of the best crops of this section, taking into consideration the small space required for growing and the money returns coming in at a time when all other money crops are yet immature. Several of our farmers have made a fine profit off the cucumbers this year.

Over 6,000 bushels of pickles have been salted at the local station this season and over $3,500 in cash paid to the farmers for the crop.

It is hoped a much larger acreage will be procured for next year.

For the benefit of growers who might be in doubt as to the local plant being run next year we will publish a few statements received from the Security Trust company of Detroit in whose hands the business of the Williams Bros. Co. has been the past year. It is not expected that the company will be in receivers hands by another season. Either the business will be reorganized or the stations themselves sold to other parties, who will of course contract with the farmers for next season's crop. There are a number of prospects for such sales now in sight. There is also a group of persons endeavoring to organize a new company and take over the entire business of the Williams Bros. Co.

In the meantime the growers may go ahead and make plans for their crop for next year with the expectation that this salting station will be conducted and their contracts solicited in plenty of time for the coming season. It is expected that the price of small pickles at the local plant will be on the same basis as the highest price paid by the company anywhere in the state or $1.00 per bushel for small pickles and proportionate prices for the other sizes. This will be an advance over the price paid in the past, and it is hoped may cause a larger percentage of the farmers to grow the crop another year.

Some Reasons Why You Should Vote Michigan Dry

Prosperity and Prohibition go hand in hand. License and Licentiousness are closely related terms. Prohibition Kansas is the richest state in the Union per capita. The empty buildings in Kansas are the jails and almshouses. There are 38 counties without a pauper and 65 counties with no prisoners in their jails.

Give Michigan a chance to empty her jails and almshouses by voting YES on the Prohibition Amendment, and NO on the Home Rule (?) Amendment.

The Ironton Grange proposes to hold a corn contest and farm products exhibit at the Grange hall, November 17, 1916. An all day open meeting will be held with a big dinner served at noon by the Grange ladies. Watch for further announcements.

In the corn contest 10-ear samples may be entered in any of the following classes: Yellow dent, white dent, white cap dent, flint, pop corn and sweet corn. The corn will be judged by a man from the agricultural college and prizes nwarded for first and second places. Get in the contest, boys, and win some prize money.

A special prize has been offered for the best one-half bushel exhibit of Inte potatoes of a standard named variety.

In connection with the contest there will be exhibits of frult, grain and vegetables.

COUNTY NORMAL NOTES

Miss Stewart, commissioner of achools, visited us last week.

The Normal class attended a meeting of the board of supervisors last week and heard a lecture by Mr. Gibson, of the Western Michigan Development Bureau.

The members of the class had the opportunity of visiting rural schools with our commissioner last week. Reports were made to the class of the work observed.

An exciting class meeting was staged Monday night after school at which time the following officers were elected: President, Lela Genett; vice president, Agatha Kenny; secretary, Dean Scroggie; treasurer, Eunice Liskum.

Mrs. Lewis and Miss Jessie Barkley called on us Monday.

The class have ordered their pins and rings.

The Normal class invited Miss Huntoon and her training room to their Angell Day program. Dr. Wilkinson's talk was both practical and inspirational. We certainly appreciate the doctor's thoughtfulness in bringing each member of the class n post card photograph of Dr. Angell, and also presenting the room with a large size photograph of him.

The first observation in the training room was that of rapid visualization in arithmetic. Miss Huntoon gave a very helpful drill.

Miss Liskum substituted in the fifth grade one day last week, and Miss Genett in the training room.

The winners in the penmanship contest last week were Ernest Smith, fifth, and Adrian Bellinger, second.

The first critic meeting was held Tuesday night.

TRAPPED AT END OF BREAKWATER

THRILLING EXPERIENCE OF A PETOSKEY FISHERMAN

Clings to Lighthouse Until Rescued By Charlevoix Coast Guards—Waves Mountain High.

Petoskey was startled at about five o'clock Monday afternoon by a call from the water front district that a man was clinging to the lighthouse at the outer end of the breakwater, while the waves were breaking mountain high over him. He was finally identified as Jay Lynch, who had gone to the breakwater to fish early in the afternoon.

A party of five or six men set out in a gasoline launch to bring him off, but the engine stalled and the boat drifted on to the beach near the Petoskey boat factory. Only the light anchor they carried saved them from being dashed to pieces on the rocks of the Arlington reef. Ropes were thrown from the dock to the half drowned crew and they were dragged ashore. Those on the dock were nearly washed overboard by the tremendous seas. The launch was stove in and otherwise badly damaged.

By thia time night had fallen and at about 8 o'clock a call was put in for the coast guards at Charlevoix and a special train of engine, flat car and caboose was sent from Petoskey with orders to loose no time by the wayside. Capt. Partridge and his crew from the Charlevoix station had the surf boat ready to load onto the flat car and the return trip was made in just 22 minutes. They succeeded in the perilous task of launching the boat in the heavy seas. When they reached the end of the breakwater, it was discovered that the castaway had taken refuge in the steel shell of the lighthouse, a protection which afforded him shelter from the full force of the huge combers that were dashing ten feet high over the breakwater and hurling their spray well over the top of the light. As the surf boat headed in towards the breakwater and rose on the crest of a wave, Lynch jumped and was caught by strong and skilful hnnds. He was half dead with cold and exposure and could not have lasted an hour longer. His coat was gone and he had wrapped himself in an old quilt.

It is safe to say that he will not again fish on the breakwater without first consulting the storm signals.

PETOSKEY PAPER MILL TOTAL LOSS

PARTIALLY DESTROYED BY FIRE MONDAY NIGHT

Hard Wind Prevents Firemen From Doing Effective Work—Loss Totals $100,000.

All that portion of the Petoskey paper mill lying aouth of the river with the exception of the boiler and wood rooms was destroyed by fire Monday night, an 80 mile gale making it impossible to check the flnmes.

The expensive paper making machines were a complete loss, as they fell from their foundations into the basement, only the huge engines at the west end of the main plant remaining capable of repair. By hard, dangerous efforts, the firemen succeeded in saving the sulphite machinery, chemical and acid buildings and the machine shop on the north side. The fire started in one of the basement work rooms of the beater plant, but how, it is not known.

The loss is a severe one to Petoskey, as well as to the paper company. The plnnt was being operated under rush ordera day and night, three crews being employed. The property loss will reach at least $100,000. It is believed the loss will be fully covered by insurance, and that the mill will be rebuilt as it was paying a handsome dividend. The Wheat Paper Co., of Elkhart, Indiana, are the lessees of the mill.

TRIP WAS A HARD TIRESOME ONE

BUT WAS ENJOYED BY MEMBERS OF CO. I

Interesting Letter from Courier Correspondent On Journey from Grayling to El Paso, Texas.

(BY HAROLD W. USHER)

El Paso, Texas, Oct. 19.—Well, at last we are on the border, and the expectations and hopes of the boys of Co. I have been fulfilled. The trip was a bard tiresome one, but regardless of this, was enjoyed by practically all members of the company with tha exceptions of myself. The trouble with my hand, which finally terminated in a severe case of blood poisoning, developed agala while on the southward journey and as each day passed, troubled me a great deal. It seemed as if my streak of good luck had deserted me, as not being satisfied with having the trouble with my band I contracted a severa cold and have been in the hospital ever since, but am now on the gain and hope within a few days to again join the boys in active work.

When orders came to entrain for the border the excitement in camp was intense. Everyone was glad that the monotony of camp life experienced at Grayling would cease, even if the same everyday drilling would be resumed when the border was reached. But deep in their hearts the boys would far rather have received the order that would havo allowed them to go home.

All day Thursday was spent in packing up and Friday morning the loading commenced. About four o'clock the first section was ready and started on tbeir southward journey. The fourth and last section did not leave until after six o'clock. All Grayling turned out to see us off—sorry to see us go, presumably, on account of a cessation of the large amount of money spent by the boys.

We passed through Bay City, Saginaw and Lansing during the night time, but regardless of this, were greeted with cheers from large crowds at each station. I went asleep after we left Lansing and woke up in Jackson. Here were hundreds of people and the cheering and words of encouragement received went a long way in bracing us up for what was ahead of us. Leaving Jackson we passed through Battle Creek, Kalamazoo, Niles and Dowagiac with practically the same demonstrations at each station.

The boys spent a larger part of their time shouting answers to the citizenry and throwing their names and addresses to the girls. It was certainly grent the way we were received, especially from the young ladies.

After leaving Niles we soon left Michigan behind and arrived at Michigan City. Here we patiently waited several hours on the railroads and trainmen. From Michigan City we passed through Gary and into Chicago. Here we spent about an hour or so, being switched around from track to track, and as it seemed to us, dodging passing trains.

We left Chicago after dark Saturday night, still going south, passing through Kankakee on to Champagne, where we were greeted by the students of the University of Illinois. At daylight the next day we looked upon a country new to us. The hills disappeared and the soil was of a different color. Negroes began to appear and patches of tobacco, the growth and appearance of which was a new one to us.

Just at dinner time we crossed the large bridges over the Ohio river at Cairo. Here we began to see fields of cotton and sugar-cane. Negroes became more numerous and amusing scenes were witnessed and enjoyed by the boys when a balky mule refused to go. The stunts gone through by the negro drivers were very amusing.

We passed rapidly through Kentucky and greatly enjoyed the beautiful scenery. The Tennessee river was reached about five o'clock, and then we shortly arrived at Memphis. Here we had the first stop and it was the only place where we left the train for any length of time.

The memory of our short stay in Memphis will long remain in the minds of the men. The society folk did everything in their power to make our stay in the southern city a memorial one. Dr. Lee A. Stone, who holds the chair of medical sociology at the University of Tennessee, headed the movement for entertaining the boys.

After we were all given a luncheon of fruit, cakes, and coffee, which we devoured while hundreds of both colored and white people watched us in glee, the companies marched to the Y. M. C. A., headed by Capt. Oscar Folk, who acted as major of the batallion. At the Y. M. C. A. the men first took a shower bath and then plunged in the refreshing swimming pool.

We left Memphis and crossed the Mississippi river. We now traveled rapidly through Arkansas into Texas. At Little Rock we were greatly impressed by the beautiful sight of the state capital building lit up at night. At Texarkana, which is partly in Texas and Arkansas, we passed the Main boys returning home from Toredo. We also met the Rbode Island bunch on the road. Altogether wa traveled 900 miles through Texes, passing on our way through Dallas and Fort Worth.

We arrived at El Paso about 9:00 a. m. Wednesday morning. So far the only interesting things I have seen in Texas are cactus, coyotes and jack rabbits. Other than these all you will see is sand, rock and mountains.

Seven states were crossed on the trip to El Paso, and a distance of more than 900 miles was made in the state of Texas alone. On account of being confined in the hospital practically all of the time since our arrival, I am unable to tell you anything about El Paso, but will in my next letter. Generally the health of the boys of Co. I is good. Of course we will have to be careful with all we eat and drink until we become acclimated. But the change from good old Michigan to the sand plains of Texas is far greater than anyone in camp anticipated.

IMPORTANT ISSUES BEFORE VOTERS

OFFICIAL BALLOT ONE OF LARGEST EVER USED

Parties Are Republican, Democratic, Progressive, Prohibition, Socialist and Socialist Labor.

When Charlevoix voters enter their voting booths on November seventh, they will carry with them six ballots, upon which they will be expected to express their preferences.

One will be the general election ballot. Four will prtain to amendments to the state constitution. One will regard the proposed general charter revision for the City of Charlevoix.

The official ballot this year will be the largest ever given to local voters. It will be about 24 1-2 inches long and 16 inches wide. On it will appear 120 names arranged under six party headings. The parties listed are Republican, Democratic, Progressive, Socialist, Prohibition and Socialist Labor, in the order named.

Only three names each appear on the Progressive and Socialist Labor parties. These candidates are for the offices of governor, lieutenant-governor and United States senator. The nearest approach to a full ticket is made by the Republicans. The Democrats have no candidates on the county ticket.

Of the amendments to be voted upon, the ones concerning prohibition and home rule are by far of the most public concern. A separate ballot will be provided for each proposition and the voter will be expected to vote in favor of one issue and against the other.

Another proposed amendment provides for the incorporation, regulation and supervision of fraternal benefit societies.

Still another issue proposes amendment relative to the right of appeal of special acts by the legislature.

The sixth ballot to be given the voters submits to the electorate the question of charter revision for the city of Charlevoix which amendment, if adopted, carries with it the election of a commission of seven members to revise the charter, such provision looking to the establishment of a commission form of government and the appointment of a city manager to have exeeutive control of the city's affairs.

Rescued by Charlevoix Boy.

A wireless message received from the Western States, D. & C. liner, Monday morning, October 21, told of the rescue of Capt. Mattison. While passing Bar Point the lookout made out the wreckage of a barge with decks awash and one man clinging to the rigging. Third officer, L. C. Taylor, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Taylor, of this city, volunteered to attempt a rescue and a lifeboat was successfully launched. Pulling through the raging seas, which at every moment threatened to overwhelm the little craft, the steamer's men reached the side of the sinking barge and succeeded in rescuing the imperiled captain, who hung to the rigging while the big waves washed over him threatening to break his hold at every moment.

FISHING SEASON OPENS NOV. 1

WEATHER HAS BEEN VERY UNFAVORABLE

Fish Tugs Make Ready to Go to Charlevoix for the Fall Business.

The closed season on the great lakes for trout and whitefish which is from October 1 to November 1, is drawing to an end when all the big tugs fishing out of this port will go to Charlevoix where there is always a big run in the fall of the year. However, during the closed season the commercial fishermen are permitted to take whitefish and trout from the water of Lake Huron and these are known as "test fish."

The meaning of "test fish" is a smaller species of trout and whitefish than is found in Lake Michigan and they are taken for the spawn and the commercial fishermen are permitted to dispose of the same. This class of trout and whitefish are the best market size and during the closed season the tugs fishing out of Cheboygan are usually afforded a lucrative business.

However, since the season closed, October 1, the weather has been such that the fishermen up to the present time have been unable to set their nets in the vicinity of Detour, but they are hoping that the weather will settle down and give them a few days fishing in Lake Huron before the season opens up again November 1, when the market will again be flooded from Lake Michigan where all fishermen rush in the fall of the year.

The club fishing which has afforded the fishermen a means of livelihood during the summer is at an end, as well as all the other species of rough fish.

After November 1 the tugs operated here by the Booth Fisheries company and Lake Superior Fish company, will go to Charlevoix for their fall fishing.—Cheboygan Tribune.

FUNERAL OF MRS. O'NEIL HELD SATURDAY MORNING

Rev. Vinyard Tells of Her Christian Experience.

The funeral of Mrs. Amos O'Neil, who died last Wednesday morning at her home at 503 Sherman avenue, was held Saturday morning at the Baptist church. The Rev. L. C. Vinyard, who had been recalled from his Detroit visit by telegram to conduct the funeral, officiated. In compliance with Mrs. O'Neil's last request, the funeral service was devoted to the relation of her experience as a Christian, which in the words of her pastor was one of exceeding richness. The body was then taken to Brookside cemetery for interment.

The deceased was 24 years of age and had suffered for nearly a year with tuberculosis, which had but served to deepen the sweetness of her sincere and loveable personality. She leaves her husband and little girl, Freda, three years of age, her mother, Mrs. George Rothe and sisters, Mrs. Henry Kabbflinck, Mrs. Minnie Sluy, Mrs. Lizzie Kline and brother, John Saonly, all of Petoskey, also a sister, Mrs. Thomas O'Neil, who lives in Gladstone, and a brother, George Saonly, who lives in Traverse City, and all of whom were present at the funeral.

HIGH COST OF LIVING HITS THE BABY'S BOTTLE

Milk Dealers Give the Cause of Prohibition a Sad Blow.

At a meeting of Charlevoix milk dealers, held Monday, October 23rd, the following resolutions were adopted:

"Resolved, that beginning November 1st, milk shall sell at eight cents per quart and four and a half cents per pint, coffee cream at ten cents per half pint and double cream at fifteen cents per half pint."

The signatures appended to this resolution are those of Elmer Ingalls, chairman; Earl Shapton, secretary; William Shapton, William Withers, John Martin and George Block.

It seems too bad that just as we are about to surrender our stronger beverages for the public good, the fluid that "cheers but not inebriates" should be so suddenly and unceremoniously "hiked" up a little higher out of our reach. It might have been expected, however, that the high price pestilence which has been following close in the wake of the European war would finally get around to the cows.

EMPLOYES TO BE PROTECTED

NEW ACCIDENT INSURANCE AND COMPENSATION LAW

Provides for Payments for Injuries or Death While In Performance of Duties.

Postoffice employes are now working under the new accident insurance and compensation law according to Postmaster T. G. Finucan. It went into effect with the passage of the $500,000 appropriation by congress, and provides a comprehensive system of payments to all postoffice workers who are injured whether temporarily or permanently, or killed in the performance of their duties.

Employes injured on duty will be paid sixty-six and two-thirds per cent of their monthly pay, per month, the payment beginning the third day after the accident, until they have recovered or for the remainder of life in case of permanent injury.

Should the employe recover sufficiently to be able to work, but not at his former position which, if the salary is less than formerly, will be increased by sixty-six and two-thirds per cent of the loss of pay.

Messengers and young man just starting in the service will be paid the minimum compensation while laid up, and if permanently disabled the compensation will increase in proportion to the natural increase of salary which would have been made.

Widows and parents of federal employes killed in service will be compensated.

Double Wedding.

On Wednesday, October 18th, at the Methodist parsonage the Rev. Quinton Walker performed a double wedding ceremony. The contracting parties were Jay A. Bailey, of Flint, and Charlotte May Faust, of East Jordan, and Elmer Faust and Ruth Hayden, both of East Jordan. The young people are all well and favorably known and have the best wishes of their many friends for a happy and prosperous life.

SHAKESPEARE CLUB ENTERTAINS

BOYNE CITY MONDAY CLUB VISITS CHARLEVOIX

Bountiful Luncheon Served at Home of Mrs. H. L. Iddings Saturday.

On Saturday, October 21, the Boyne City Monday club, composed of 35 or 40 of our neighbor city's intelligent and progressive women, paid a visit to the Shakespeare Study club. They were entertained at the home of Mrs. H. L. Iddings, the large living room being specially adapted for such a gathering. This visit has been in anticipation since last spring as it was then decided that these clubs would have reciprocity days. At the first meeting the hospitality to be furnished by the Shakespeare club and the program by the Monday club.

Twelve thirty o'clock was the time arranged for luncheon and before that the guests arrived. They were received informally by the executive committee, Mesdames Shanahan, Auid and Iddings, and welcomed by all members of the club.

The luncheon was gracefully and efficiently served by the young daughters of the members, Irene Auld, Phila Armstrong, Catherine and Margaret Fitch, Jean and Marguerita Swinton, Hildegarde and Clara Wilkinson. "With youth on the prow and pleasure at the helm" the success of the luncheon was assured from the beginning. When the plates had been cleared away Mrs. Shanehan, president, in a well worded speech, greeted the Boyne City club. President Mrs. S. A. Fleming gave a pleasing response and introduced as chairman and leader Mrs. W. L. Martin who filled the office with credit.

The first number on the program was a vocal solo by Miss Helen Martin, who responded to a hearty encore.

The subject of "Home Economics," its relation to club work by an enthusiast, and one well acquainted with this line of work, Mrs. H. W. McIntosh, having for nine years served on the committee of Home Economics for the State Federation of Women's Clubs, was a banner number. Then came another fine solo by Miss Lu McManus, teacher of music in the Boyne City schools, who also responded to an encore.

Pure Food, some of its problems, by Mrs. J. M. Gleason, who has been a student of this work since its beginning in Portland Oregon, seven years ago, merited the interest it received. Mrs. Gleason made us feal that it wouldn't be amiss for us to take a microscopic view around our own seemingly perfectly clean city for fear some little bug might get us. Mrs. W. H. White spoke on the subject of "Domestic Helpers." We all ought to know how to keep help (if we are so fortunate as to have it) contented to stay with us after this talk.

Mrs. J. M. Tompkins then sang a solo and after a hearty encore sang again. Mrs. James Gaskin, Jr., also sang and responded to an encore, which concluded the program and a red letter day at least for the Shakespeare Study club.

The Boyne City ladies certainly know how to get up an interesting and practical program, and the Shakespeare ladies are wondering if they can do it when it comes time for them to reciprocate. Anyway they'll "screw their courage to the sticking place and they will not fail."

Mrs. Walter Chrysler, of Petoskey, and Mrs. Clapper, teacher of home economics in our school, were guests.

W. C. T. U. CONVENTION

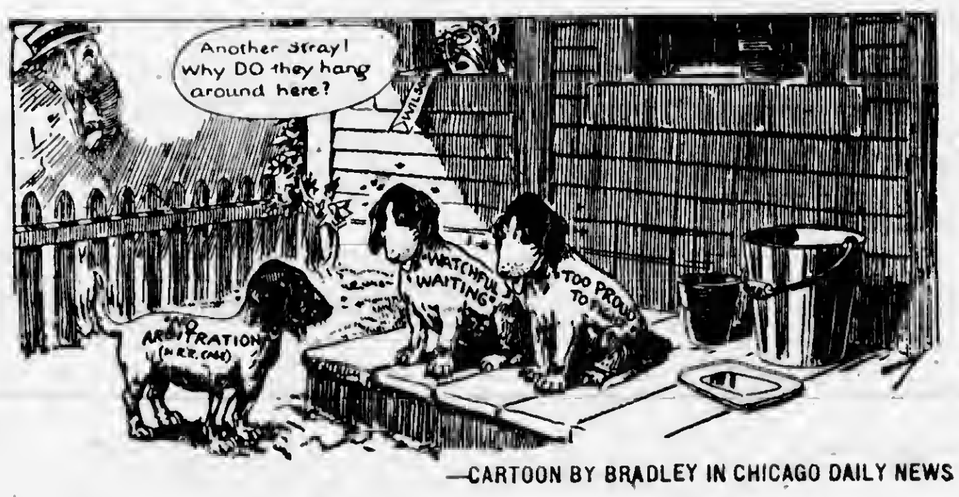
"DOG-GONE IT ALL!"



—CARTOON BY BRADLEY IN CHICAGO DAILY NEWS

DID NOT FEEL LIKE EVEN WALKING ACROSS THE FLOOR TANLAC REVIVED HER STRENGTH

"I was in such a weak, nervous, almost exhausted condition. I did not even feel like walking across the floor and was wondering what I could do to revive my strength and be able to take an interest in things around me, when my brother-in-law told me about Tanlac and the amazing good he had received from it. He felt sure it would help me, so encouraged by his enthasiastic praises, I started taking Tanlac.

"Besides being so weak, I could not eat, had pains in my back and side, conld hardly sleep at all, but since I have taken Tanlac, and only one bottls at that, considering the condition my stomach was in, I can eat pretty well and I feel much stronger and better in every way. The pains in my back and side have almost disappeared and I can now sleep better, and a good night's rest means much to me.

"I can say since I have seen the help Tanlac has been to me I am going to keep right on taking it because I feel it will do me more good than anything else I have ever taken, judging from the merits of the one bottle, and I am glad my brother-in-law recommended it to me," said Mrs. J. Collins of B. L. & D. Drive, Flint, to J. A. Copp, the Tanlac man, while telling him of the good Tanlac had done her and how she had been so pleased to feel well again.

TANLAC CAN BE OBTAINED HERE ONLY AT THE STORE OF B. A. HERMAN.

Tanlac can also be obtained at the following stores: W. A. Hyslop at Boyne City, F. J. Fesseader at Central Lake.

—you can smoke it as long and as hard as you like without any comeback but real tobacco happiness!

On the reverse side of every Prince Albert package you will read:

"PROCESS PATENTED JULY 30TH, 1907"

That means to you a lot of tobacco enjoyment. Prince Albert has always been sold without coupons or premiums. We prefer to give quality!

YOU'LL find a cheery howdy-do on tap no matter how much of a stranger you are in the neck of the woods you drop into. For, Prince Albert is right there — at the first place you pass that sells tobacco! The toppy red bag sells for a nickel and the tidy red tin for a dime; then there's the handsome pound and half-pound tin "humidors" and the pound crystal-glass humidor with sponge-moistener top that keeps the tobacco in such bang-up shape it's a cinch!

in goodness and in pipe satisfaction is all we or its enthusiastic friends ever claimed for it!

It answers every smoke desire you or any other man ever had! It is so cool and fragrant and appealing to your smokeappetite that you will get chummy with it in a mighty short time!

Will you invest 5c or 10c to prove out our say-so on the national joy smoke?

CHARLES JEFFERIES

CHARLEVOIX ASTONISHED BY SIMPLE MIXTURE

Charlevoix people are astonished at the INSTANT action of simple buckthorn bark, glycerine, etc., as mixed in Adler-i-ka. ONE SPOONFUL removes such surprising foul matter it relieves almost ANY CASE constipation, sour stomach or gas. Because Adler-i-ka acts on BOTH lower and upper bowel, a few doses often relieve or prevent appendicitis. A short treatment helps chronic stomach trouble. B. A. Herman, druggist.

If the people wish to prohibit the manufacture, sale, giving away and use of whiskey, why go less than half way to do it?

If the use of whiskey is the greatest curse to the world, why allow the manufacture, sale and use of it in the churches?

If the leaders of the Anti-Saloon League wish to prohibit the manufacture, sale, giving away and use of whiskey in the state, why do they ask the people to vote for a law they know and admit will not prohibit either, if such law is passed, and do they wish to keep up turmoil, strife, malice and hate, as in the past?

If whiskey is the greatest curse, why allow its use in the churches, thereby setting before the young the legal use of it?

Will the dry amendment prohibit? The Drys say No. The state of Maine has been dry the average life of man, yet the saloons, blind pigs and blind tigers are wide open every day in the year and have been all those years.

Tyranny never has nor ever will make a friend for any man or cause. Billy Sunday says that drunkards, murderers and robbers come from the homes of Christians, so-called. Then we must stop the birth of boys, except for the example to be set by a few of the boys.

Chauffeurs and drivers of automobiles have crippled, maimed and killed more people in this country in the last 12 months than all the whiskey drunk in the last 12 years. We must stop the manufacture, use and sale of automobiles for any use, "except" for the use of such drivers and chauffeurs.

Force by law makes enemies to the law. Kindness, sympathy and education makes friends to the law and the people. Villification and abuse never has nor ever will make a temperate man of a drunkard.

There is a tender chord in the breast of every man that some power can touch through education, sympathy, love and persuasion, but not by abuse of the man and his liberty and free moral agency given him by his creator.

I am for temperance in all things and try to be conservative in all the questions before us. To study both sides of all questions is the duty of every man, in order that he may be competent to argue his side and sustain his opinion. The man who says there is but one side to a question on which the people are divided, as they are on the liquor question, proves that man to be a fool to the greatest degree.

If the people wish to kill or do away with the manufacture of liquor, we must begin at the life and vitals of the business to do it. We can't kill a tree by going around it, cutting leaves and twigs from its branches, but must begin at the source of its life. We must "except" nothing if we wish to get final results and do away with expense, malice and hate.

JAMES M. FELTS,

CHARLEVOIX HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

Any one passing the "Little Red School House" last Friday would have heard strange noises, which if you stopped to listen would have developed into a sort of rythm well worthy of the name. The causa of these noises was a foot ball mass meeting which was instituted for the purpose of arousing a little "spizerinctum" (meaning pep) for Saturday's game. Many talks were given and much optimism shown by every one.

The foot ball game was a decided success from Boyne's standpoint. The score was; C. H. S., 13; B. H. S., 72.

The ground was wet and soggie and part of the game played was in a snow storm. Charlevoix's light line seemed unable to hold Boyne back and they came through repeatedly for three to fifteen yard gains.

In the first quarter Cartier got the ball on a fumble and ran the length of the field for a touch down. This made the score 6-7, we missing our goal. The other score waa secured by the same man. The ball was kicked behind the goal, Boyne fumbled and Cartier fell on it.

Hallet, Hyck, O'Neil and Finucan played their usual good game. Capt. Durance was unable to play because of an injury, but is back on the job this week.

The coach hints that some changes are to be made in the line up.

What will be known as one of the principal social events of the year will occur next Friday evening. Namely a junior masquerade at the Masonic temple. It is hinted that there will be a spread during the evening.

Can you figure it out?

Twelve men are accustomed to eating lunch together each day at a private table for twelve.

How many times can they eat together without repeating the same seating arrangement?

Answer will be given next week.

SCHOOL COMMISSIONER'S NOTES

May L. Stewart, Commissioner.

This past week has been pretty much broken up by potato digging, chicken pox and various other contagions profitable and unprofitable. Return trips will have to be made to the schools thus afflicted.

If Eveline township still holds the banner for school progress we must also yield a blue ribbon and doff our caps to Melrose. Four schools of the five have made wonderful initial improvement during the past year and three of the five are candidates for standard plates with the lines well drawn.

Melrose No. 1 has new seats well placed, a new hard wood floor, a drinking fountain which the director says they thank the teacher for, and the blackboard just right for the little folks. The Easton school has a big problem to solve but they are working on the matter all the time.

Wnlloon Lake school now has 18 per cent one side lighting in the upper room and 19 per cent side and rear light in the primary room, a new floor in the grammar grade room and new seats for the primary, a new covered porch and double roller translucent shades. Their furnace supplies a splendid supply of fresh air but they have still to solve the question of disposing adequately of the foul air. This is the first school in which the teachers have been able to answer "Yes" to the question, "Does the school board furnish a sweeping compound?"

Clarion school has a new furnace splendidly installed with hot air registers in side wall, fresh air coming from the big outdoors and foul air flues approved by state architects. The children are happy and the teachers tell of improved school spirit all around. The buildings are freshly painted in attractive colors and the outbuildings screened.

The Curfew school, Melrose No. 5, has new seats for the small folks and the seats all reset absolutely correct. They have moved the heater to the opposite corner for improved ventilation with a little less smoke, have a splendid new book case and above all have plans for the future.

Bay township schools are enjoying the potato digging epidemic all but one.

The Horton Bay school was closed when the commissioner arrived but she was in time to see unpacked 42 bran new seats, single adjustable with steel frames, the very best that the American Seating company had in stock. Maybe it is 20 years since any furniture of this kind has been seen in this neighborhood but say it looks as if this district knew how to do things right when they do start. The director says they are going to paint the woodwork, too, so the seats won't be the only improvement of the year.

M. S. T. A. at Grand Rapids, November 2nd and 3rd. Fine inspiration for the teaching force of our state.

A new cement approach at Three Bells.

The Melrose township teachers' meeting was held in Wnlloon Lake on the afternoon of Tuesday the 17th. Everyone on time but the commissioner and they made her pretty sorry after she got there even if she wasn't when Josephus loitered on the way.

Charlevoix County Teachers' Institute will be held in East Jordan, the big speaker to be Miss Schreiber, of Boston, Massachusetts, scheduled for January 10th. She is worth it. Start boosting now.

Two schools in Marion township visited during the week.

The Johnson school, Marion No. 3, has done away with the old platform by either burying it or using it for kindling, and a piece of new hard wood floor appears in its place level with the rest of the room plan. The room has been tinted too and has developed a case of new baseboarditis. Would new seats in this school help in the appearance of the room, or the health and comfort of the pupils?

Marion No. 4, which is the Nowland school, has covered the approach to the basement, has a new floor and newly plastered walls. This is a small district but we have been given to understand unofficially that the plan is to work every summer for a period of two or three years with the plans carefully made. Any school district following this plan can get there at the end of that time. It is not always the number of soldiers but the plan of the generals that wins the fight. Three cheers for the school board that is working with an aim in view.

A number of Hollowe'en socials are being planned by busy teachers here and there. Among those reported are those of Deer Lake with Miss Norma Johnson as teacher, and at Heart Lake with Miss Ethel Sanford as teacher.

Clarion school teachers, Miss Mary Hale and Mr. Guy Watters, conducted a silver medal temperance contest last Thursday.

Notice to Auto Drivers.

Violations of the speed ordinance during the past week or so have been frequent occurrences and must be stopped at once. Remember the speed on Bridge street is 10 miles and on side streets 15 miles per hour. Prosecution will follow if violations do not cease. Obey the speed law and avoid trouble.

Satisfy!—that's a new thing for a cigarette to do

It's nothing for a cigarette to just taste good—lots of cigarettes may do that. But Chesterfields do more—they satisfy! Just like a thick, juicy steak satisfies when you're hungry.

Yet, with all that, Chesterfields are MILD!

No other cigarette can give you this new enjoyment (satisfy, yet mild), for the good reason that no cigarette maker can copy the Chesterfield blend—an entirely new combination of tobaccos and the most important development in cigarette blending in 20 years.

The United States Department of Agriculture, Bulletin No. 142, says white bread made from wheat flour is the most nourishing and cheapest food—above figures prove it.

Think of it! $1.00's worth of wheat flour baked into bread provides enough nourishment to last a man in full vigor doing moderate muscular work, seven and one-half days.

This means that every dollar invested in goes almost twice as far, when baked into bread, as one dollar invested in any other variety of food.

Besides you save nearly one-half by baking your bread instead of buying it.

You will have better bread, too.

Every sack of Lily White Flour is all pure, wholesome, healthful and nutritious.

The next time you bake bread use Lily White Flour. Then spread a good, big slice of the fresh bread with good butter, and if you don't say Lily White bakes the best looking, best tasting, tenderest bread you ever ate we will treat.

LET THE PEOPLE PAY

The collector of customs at the port of New York, who draws n salary of $12,000 a year, has deserted his office and gone out on the stump for Woodrow Wilson. He has not deserted the salary. It is quite likely that the office will get along just as well without him, as many offices these days nre getting along without their highly paid incambents. Letting the office run itself is part of the Democratic program while the party bosses are seeing to it that the American people put up a great shout for four years more of Wilsonism. It takes a lot of money and a lot of official assistance to raise a good shout for four years more of any kind of a Democratic administration, so they let the office work go hang. The campaign must be conducted by the paid employes of the government, even if the expenditures are exceeding the revenues at the rate of a million dollars a day. "Let the people pay," has been the rule of the Wilson administration and there is no disposition to change it now.

FARMERS PAY THE FREIGHT

R. V. Taylor, of Mobile, Alabama, vice president and general manager of the Missouri and Ohio railroad breezed into Washington recently and announced that he had joined the "Yes, Dammit" club of St. Louis, Missouri. This club is composed of whole-souled but somewhat misguided individuals who were flim-flammed into voting for President Wilson in 1912. Mr. Taylor said he recently had a talk with Flannagan, one of the four railroad brotherhood bandits who held up Wilson and the "Greatest Deliberative Body in the World," and made them pass the eight-hour-day ten-hour wage-bill. "Flannagan, just where do you stand on this proposition," asked Mr. Taylor. "Eight hours work, eight hours play, eight hours sleep, and eight dollars a day," replied Flannagan. He was frank about it, at all events. But how many farmers realize eight dollars a day? And yet the farmers will have to come across for a large share of this wage increase when the public is called upon to pay the freight.

The fact that a candidate removes his hat, grasps you earnestly by the hand, and inquires anxiously about your family, does not prove that he will be able to see you on the street four weeks from today.

LEATHER GOES UP TAKING SHOES WITH IT

Almost Impossible to Buy Them for Less Than $5.00 a Pair.

You need not be a bit surprised if you should happen to see Charlevoix shoe merchants displaying wooden shoes in their shoe windows. Wooden footgear, if the price of leather coatinues to advance, may be worn, not from choice perhaps, but from necessity.

Shoes that formerly sold for $3.50 and $4 are now costing from $5 to $7 a pair and the prices are advancing daily. It is almost impossible to procure a pair of shoes now for less than $5. In the last month alone leather has advanced 75 per cent and at the present rate will soon be unpurchaseable. Even now, stock that was ordered over six months ago has not arrived on account of the scarcity of material in the factories.

So if you are contemplating the purchase of a pair of new "kicks" you had better do it now, else you may be compelled to hobble around in Hollandese style.

AGED PIONEER STRICKEN BY THE GRIM REAPER

Death Came Peacefully to Mrs. Julia Moore Last Monday Night.

Mrs. Julia Moore, for many years a resident of this county, died last Monday night at the age of 84. She was in good health and had gone to bed in the best of spirits. When her daughter, Mrs. William Cowan, with whom she was staying, went to call her to breakfast Tuesday morning, she found that her mother had passed away. Death had evidently come peacefully upon her at some time during the night, as she lay asleep, as there was no visible evidence that her going had been accompanied by suffering.

Mrs. Moore was born at West Sazy, Clinton county, New York, September 23, 1832, and came to Charlevoix county in 1872. She was survived by three daughters, Mrs. William Cowan, of Charlevoix, Mrs. Wagner, of Norwood, and Mrs. Empey, of Atwood, and many friends who will mourn her loss sincerely.

At this time plans for the funeral have not been definitely decided.

Old Residents Leave Town.

Mrs. Brayton Saltonstall entertained a number of friends at a six o'clock dinner Thursday, October 12th, in honor of Mr. and Mrs. M. W. LaPeer who left Monday, October 16th, for Kalamazoo, where they will make their home. They have lived in Charlevoix for over 13 years and ha many friends in this community who regret to see them leave. Mrs. LaPeer recently received notice of the death of her only brother, B. F. Mayley, who was well known in Charlevoix and Emmet counties.

CHAPTER IV.

"I'll Tell Her You're a Baptist."

STEVE was most taciturn at the table the following morning. His moody silence puzzled even Sarah Hunter. But when the latter, whose Sunday schedule no storm could alter, came home from church and found Caleb and the boy immersed in a mass of flies and leaders and lines which had been skeined to dry her thorough disapproval loosed the boy's tongue. She stood in the doorway surveying with a frown their preoccupied industry.

"It seems to me, Cal," she commented, "that even if you haven't any regard for the Sabbath you might do better than lead those younger than yourself into doing things which might better be left for days which were meant for such things."

She swished upstairs before Caleb had a chance to answer. But after she had gone Steve looked up from a line he was spooling.

"She sin't particularly pleased, I take it," he remarked.

"Not particularly," Caleb chuckled, "It's funny, too, because I do most of this sort of work on Sunday. You'd think she'd become resigned to it, but she doesn't."

The boy thought deeply for awhile.

"Didn't—didn't the 'postles cast their nets on Sunday?" he asked presently.

Up shot Caleb's head.

"Huh-h-h?" he gasped.

"I sed didn't the 'postles cast their nets on Sunday?" Steve repeated. "Seems to me they did, but I can't just rec'llect naw what chapter it was in."

Caleb pulled his face into a semblance of sobriety.

"Seems to me they did," he agreed a little weakly, "now that you mention it. I don't just recollect where it occurred, either, at the moment, but we'll have to look it up, because as a case of precedent it'll be a clincher for Sarah."

Allison joined them Monday morning at daybreak. All day they drove through the seeping rain—drove north in Caleb's buckboard, to turn off finally upon a woods trail that run into the east along the lesser branch of the river. During the ride Steve's hearing toward the third member of the party was too plain to escape notice, for he never looked at nor directed a word to Allison unless it was in reply to a direct question, and then his answers were almost monosyllabic. But Allison, who, as usual, gave his undivided attention to the country through which they were passing, in attitude toward the boy was even more remarkable.

Once when they had halted at noon he pointed out a hillside of pine, black beneath the rain, close clustered and of mastlike straightness.

"There's a wonderful stand of pine, Cal," he remarked. "I'd venture to say that it would cut at least 2,000,000 feet."

Instantly, although the remark was addressed to him, Caleb knew that it was Stephen's comment for which Allison was angling, and hard upon his casual statement the boy's head came sharply around.

"She'll run nigh double that," he swallowed the bait. "She'll run double and mebby a trifle more."

Nor did Allison even smile now.

"What makes you think so?" he asked.

Again there came the boy's pat answer.

"I ain't thinkin'," he said. "It's jest there. They're close set, them trees, and they're clear, clean to the tops. There ain't a stump there that won't run near ten standard."

Allison squinted and finally nodded his head.

"Maybe," he agreed; "maybe."

But later Caleb saw him enter some figures in his small, black bound notebook.

That night the episode was repeated with a bit of variation. They had set up their tent and made camp a little before nightfall. Far below them, hidden by the trees, the east branch cut a threadlike gash through the center of a valley broad enough and round enough to have been a veritable amphitheater of the gods. The whole great hollow was clothed with evergreen, a sea of dripping tops in the semigloom, and Allison, when he had set aside his plate and lighted his pipe, lifted a hand in a gesture which embraced it all.

"If you weren't so lazy brained, Cal," he said, "that sight would stir in you something more than a mere appreciation of what you call the 'sublimity of sheer immensity.' For the man who can look ahead ten or a dozen years there is an undreamed of fortune right here in this valley."

Caleb yawned.

"No doubt," he agreed. "But I didn't coin that phrase for immense fortunes. I guess I'm old fashioned enough to like it a whole lot better just as it is."

Then he became suddenly aware of the tense earnestness with which Stephen O'Mara was listening. And when Allison, thinking aloud, mused that the cost of driving the timber down the shallow stream to the faroff mills would be perhaps prohibitive words fairly leaped to the boy's lips.

"But they—they won't be drivin' that timber by floods when they git to tacklin' these here valleys!" he exclaimed. "Old Tom sez when they really git to lumberin' these mountains they'll skid it down to the railroad tracks and yank it out by steam!"

That sober statement in the piping voice had a strange effect upon Allison. He leaned forward, a sort of guarded astonishment in his attitude, to peer at the childish face in the fire glow. Then he seemed to remember that it was just a bit of a woods waif who had spoken. But Caleb, who was lazy brained in some matters, sensed that Steve had put into words Allison's own unspoken thought, just as Allison at that moment voiced the question which he was about to utter himself.

"I suppose it was this—this Old Tom who taught you all these things you know about timber?" he said, curious.

Steve pondered the question.

"Wal-l-l, yes," he answered at last. "Old Tom learned me some, but—but most of it I kind of feel as if I always knowed."

The boy was fast asleep, curled up beneath the blankets, when Caleb finally broached that night the matter which had kept him awake the entire night before. And when he had finished Allison sat quiet for a long time before he offered any reply.

"You mean"— he began at length.

"I just mean that I'm going to give him his chance," Caleb cut in. His voice was hushed, but vehement. "Why, man, think what he has this minute to start with—a brain as clear as a dismond, absolutely fresh, absolutely unspoiled or fagged with the nauseatical folderol which makes up the bulk of the usual boy's education of his age, and a working knowledge, for instance, of this north country which most men envy! Why, the possibilities are limitless!"

Allison puffed his pipe in silence.

"No doubt you're right," he admitted. "In ten years, with a technical education to back up his practical knowledge, he might prove priceless to some one who had need of such a specialist, always assuming, of course, that he developed according to promise. But the possibilities are limitless, too, in the other directions, aren't they?"

"Meaning?" invited Caleb.

"Well, you don't know any too much concerning his antecedents, do you?" Allison suggested. "And still"—

"I don't have to," Caleb interrupted, "not after one look at him."

—"and still if you catch a boy young enough," Allison finished serenely, "you can make a fairly presentable gentleman out of almost any material, with time enough and money enough to teach him what to do."

"You can," Caleb came back, "but, no matter how much money you spend, you can't make the sort of a gentleman out of him that knows without being taught what not to do! They—they have to be born to that, Dexter."

And there they let it drop. But the next morning when they were alone upon the brook Caleb, after several false starts, managed to reopen the subject with the boy himself.

"Has it ever occurred to you, Steve," he asked, "that all these things you know about the woods might be valuable some day to—to men who pay well for such knowledge?"

Steve paid no apparent heed to the question until he had landed a trout which he had hooked a moment before. It was a heavy fish, and Caleb had promised to teach him how to handle that fly rod. Then he looked up.

"Once Old Tom sed they'd be payin' me more'n he ever earned in his lifetime jest to go around and tell 'em how much good lumber they was in standin' trees. Is that—is that what you mean?"

"Partly—partly, but not entirely either," Caleb went on. "You said last night that when they got to lumbering these mountains they'd be taking it out by steam. When they do they'll want men who know the woods, but they'll have to know how to bridge rivers and cross swamps too, won't they?"

The boy promptly forgot his fishing. Knee deep in the stream, he faced squarely around toward Caleb, and from that glowing countenance the man knew that he had only repeated something which long before had already fired the boy's imagination.

"They's places where I kin git 'em to learn me them things, ain't they?" he demanded.

"Yes," said Caleb, "there are places. And you—you were thinking of going to school?"

"Thinkin' of it?" echoed Steve. "I always been thinkin' of it. Why, that's all I come outen the timber fer!"

"But you said you meant to locate something to do," the man argued, nonplused, "after you had looked around a trifle."

Steve's eyes dropped toward the wake drill trousers and big boots, the latter half hidden from sight by the swirling water.

"I got to earn money first," he explained patiently. "I—I jest couldn't git to go to school—in these here clothes."

"Oh!" murmured Caleb. "Oh!" And then, recovering himself, "That'll take a long time," he ventured.

The boy smiled strangely—the first smile of man's sophistication which Caleb had seen upon his face.

"I've always had to wait a long time for everything I've wanted," he answered, "but I always git it, just the same, if I only want it hard enough."

Caleb cleared his throat self consciously.

"Still," he argued again, "it would waste some very valuable years. Now

"You mean," he breathed; "you mean—jest live—with you?"

—now, what do you think of staying with me, and—and starting in this fall?"

The boy's lips fell apart while he stood and gaped up into Caleb's slightly red face.

"You mean," he breathed; "you mean—jest live—with you?"

"That was my idea," said Caleb.

And then slowly the boy's head dropped again, as it had when he bowed to gaze at his uncouth, begrimed clothes. The man thought that he caught the inference of that moment of silence.

"We can fix up the matter of clothes later," he made haste to forestall any objection in that direction. "That doesn't amount to anything, anyway."

The clear eyes lifted again, steady and wide and very, very grave.

"I always knowed it was comin'," said Stephen O'Mara. "I always knowed it was a-comin'—this chance—even when I didn't know how it would come. Ner I wa'n't thinkin' about my clothes. I reckon I kin learn jest as fast in these as in any. I was jest thinkin' about Miss Sarah. She—she might not like it, havin' two men folks around the house under foot."

It was Caleb's turn to stand agape.

"Miss Sarah!" he faltered, astonished, and then he remembered. He laughed unsteadily with relief. For an instant he had been inexplicably afraid that the boy was going to refuse his offer.

"Why, you mustn't mind what Sarah said yesterday," he rushed on. "She—she—well, she's a Baptist, Steve, and you know what that means."

He leaned forward a little, his voice quite stealthily confidential.

"But I can fix that all right," he promised. "I can surely fix that. For I'll tell her—I'll tell her you're a Baptist too. Will you—will you stay?"

And after a time solemnly Steve nodded. Later, when alone, Caleb chuckled mountainously over his reply.

"That's—that's what I cal'late I be," he said.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

VAN PELT'S TOURING DIARY

Lake George, N. Y., Sept. 27, 1916.

This has been another red letter day. We spent the entire forenoon in visiting the only two old friends on our trip that we wished to see in our old home town. One lives in a large house, 175 years old, which is still in a good state of preservation—built by Major Banker, of Revolutionary fame. The tile in the fire place was brought from Holland. The frame work is white oak, 12 by 12 and hewn by hand, so arranged to serve at a fort to protect them from the Indians and Tories. Here lives Charles E. Derrick, who, with my present traveling companion, Eugene A. Van Pelt and myself, comprise a trio of my young boyhood days and it is needless to say that we had a jolly good visit. Next, we visited the old house where I was born and afterwards the one where I was bound out from the time I was ten to fifteen years of age, working early and late, from sun up to sun down and then doing the chores and milking cows, for which I received my board and clothes, which consisted in the summer time of two hickory shirts and three pairs of overalls. God furnished the shoes, as I went barefoot, not from choice but from compulsion.

I here received my college education, being allowed to go to school one and one-half miles away in the winter, which accounts for my excellent vocabulary, especially so, when I get good and mad and feel that I have an occasion to use it. This school house was called Rabbit college, because of their being so many rabbits there. The size of it was 14 by 14.

After dinner, we drove from Troy to Lake George, New York, 50 miles, in less than two hours. The road was truly wonderful. The country is surely beautiful. No frost as yet. This little hamlet of Lake George at the head of the lake, bearing the same name, is set in among the mountains and is a perfect gem of a place. We are now just approaching the great hunting and fishing grounds of the Adirondacks. We saw a brook trout today 20 inches long. A taxidermist has stuffed it instead of a cook and it hung in the hotel office to encourage tourists to try and get one like it, for which privilege they may only pay a matter of 8 or ten dollars per day. This is not a cheap john place, by a "mill" site. Better get a map and go with us on this trip. Today we passed through Lansingburg, Waterford, Suratoga, Glenns Falls and Lake George.

The following taken from a clipping out of the Troy, New York, "Record" for September 26, 1916, is sent in by George H. Van Pelt, who is in Troy visiting his boyhood home on a touring pilgrimage. It was erected in 1851, when George was a boy of ten, and was then one of the great things shown visitors to the then smart little city of Troy.

"The wheel was first erected in 1851 by the late Henry Burden, one of the organizers of the Burden iron works, and was patented and controlled exclusively by Mr. Burden for use in the old nail factory. The site of the old factory, long a thing of the past, still is to be seen from Mill street. Directly in the rear of the Stanton steamer house. During its active service, the wheel furnished 1,200 h. p Around it are 36 buckets, each six feet three inches in depth, into which the water poured from a channel. Six hollow cast iron tubes, forming the axis of the wheel, were keyed into flanges seven feet in diameter. From each of these flanges diverged 264 iron rods of two inch thickness, all of which terminated at the circumference of the wheel. This old land mark, which seems to be doomed, is an overshot wheel, measuring 60 feet in dinmeter and 22 feet wide.

Unless immediate steps are taken for the preservation of this water wheel, the largest in the world and an old and established landmark of this city, this relic of older days in Troy's history will soon pass from existence and fall prey to the junk heap. The wheel at the present time is not approachable to visitors, inasmuch as the elements have so eaten into the foundation that the city authorities have deemed it necessary to erect a safety rail around it to prevent strangers from being injured by falling portions. Sometime ago, one of the main supporting walls fell, thus causing the wheel to list towards one side and making it dangerous to approach.

Construction Work Started.

Construction work is being started by the B. C., G. & A. railroad on its lines east of Atlanta. At present three miles of track will be laid to reach the timber which will be used in the winter run of the White company's mills here. It is thought by spring the remaining few miles of track to be laid will be completed, thus giving direct passenger service between Boyne City and Alpena.

Three Runaways One Day.

Three runaways occurred almost simultaneously at Central Lake last Tuesday. George Dawson was driving down the Morrow hill with a load of beans when the horses crowded to one side, upsetting the wagon. Mr. Dawson was struck and his hip dislocated. Shortly after, a wagon loaded with cornstalks was upset in turning around, and the driver buried beneath. The horses ran away and were injured. A passerby was attracted by the cry of "help" from under the corn stalks and set to work extricating the man who was nearly suffocated. The team in running away frightened the horse D. H. Stebbins was driving and it ran away, badly bruising Mr. Stebbins and breaking the wagon.

Buy Up Electric Plants.

An effort is being made at Traverse City by outside interests to buy up all the electrical plants in that section of the state and merge them under one management. In order to complete their chain of plants it is necessary for them to get possession of the Traverse City power plant which was purchased by the city in 1912 and which has been a money maker for the city ever since it was taken over.

The company offers to take over the municipal hydro-electric plant and to pay the city $150,000 which was the price originally paid by the city for the plant, also to make a contract with the city for light and power at the same figure that it is shown to be costing the city at the present time or at a price similar to that paid for like service in other places in the state. The proposition has been laid before the chamber of commerce but has not been submitted to the city commission as yet. As the city plant has netted the city from $3,000 to $13,000 a year since it was purchased it is a question whether the people will want to let go of the property.

Launch Enchantress In Trouble.

The launch Enchantress, of Charlevoix, started for the Soo, Saturday morning, but owing to the very heavy sea was compelled to put about and run for this harbor to get protection, says the Harbor Springs Republican in their issue of October 19. When in the vicinity of Seven Mile Point something went wrong with the engine and the boat became hard to manage in the heavy choppy sea. They finally dropped anchor near the portage and made up their minds to ride out the sea, but the wind increased in its fury and about three o'clock in the afternoon the boat was flying a distress flag and blowing signals. Fire Chief Ed Juilleret enlisted the services of Pfister Brother's fish boat and accompanied by Frank Pfister, Ed Pfister and Peter Swailes, engineer on the government patrol boat, went to the rescue. The little boat plowed into the sea which often hid it from the view of those on shore, but finally reached the distressed boat and threw a line to the men on board and they were brought to safety within the harbor and it was very fortunate that they were for the wind increased so much in force that there was a grave question whether the boat could have outlived the night. The men on board were Ray Hamilton, Frank Sears and John Taylor. H. W. Melching repaired their engine and they proceeded to the Soo, Monday morning, but must have again encountered heavy seas.

Breakwater Damaged.

Considerable damage was done by Monday's storm to the Petoskey breakwater. Many of the heavy top timbers were washed away and the outer end of the breakwater was also damaged at its foundation. Engineers from Grand Rapids will probably soon investigate the cost of repairs and make recommendations to headquarters at Washington.

Kidnapping at Harbor Springs.

Miss Edith Miller, a fifteen-year-old school girl from Harbor Springs, was spirited away Tuesday of last week by a man and a woman in an automobile and it is believed the man was her father, who several years ago deserted the child's mother and brothers and sisters at Owosso.

Miss Miller was taken into the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Hogan after the mother had been left alone four years ago, and has since made her home with them. She was 15 years of age and in the seventh grade in the Harbor Springs schools.

Tuesday morning of last week, shortly after school called, a strange woman appeared and told the teacher she was Miss Miller's aunt. She said she was to be in Harbor Springs but an hour or two and asked if Edith could not be excused to visit with her during that time. The request was granted and nothing has since been seen of the girl by her friends.

While the strange woman was at the high school building a strange man was hiring a car at the Lamb garage to make a trip to Petoskey. George Wheeler was sent on the trip and says the man met the woman and Miss Wheeler down town and that he drove them to Petoskey where they boarded the southbound G. R. & I. train.

Mr. and Mrs. Hogan have received a card signed in Edith's hand writing which says: "Mrs. Hogan, I have gone with my father. You may hear from me later."

The card was post marked Boyne City but the message did not appear to have been written in Edith's hand writing.

Remarkable Success of Talented Physician in the Treatment of Chronic Diseases

Offer Services Free of Charge

The United Doctors Specialist, licensed by the State of Michigan for the treatment of all diseases, including deformities, nervous and chronic diseases of men, women and children, offer to all who call on this trip, consultation, examination, advice free, making no charge whatever, except the actual cost of treatment. All that is asked in return for these valuable services is that every person treated will state the result obtained to their friends and thus prove to the sick and afflicted in every city and locality, that at last treatments have been discovered that are reasonably sure and certain in their effect.

The United Doctors are experts in the treatment of chronic diseases and so great and wonderful have been their results that in many cases it is hard to find the dividing line between skill and miracle.

Diseases of the stomach, intestines, liver, blood, skin, nerves, heart, spleen, rheumatism, sciatica, tapeworm, leg ulcers, weak lungs and those afflicted with long-standing, deep seated, chronic diseases, that have baffled the skill of the family physician, should not fail to call. Deafness often has been cured in sixty days.

According to their system no more operation for appendicitis, gall stones, tumors, goiter, piles, etc., as all cases accepted will be treated without operation or hypodermic injection, as they were among the first in America to earn the name of "Bloodless Surgeons," by doing away with the knife with blood and with all pain in the successful treatment of these dangerous diseases.

No matter what your ailment may be, no matter what others may have told you, no matter what experience you may have had with other physicians, it will be to your advantage to see them at once. Have it forever settled in your mind. If your case is incurable they will give you such advice as may relieve and stay the disease. Do not put off this duty you owe yourself or friends or relatives who are suffering because of your sickness, as a visit at this time may help you.

Worn-out and run-down men or women, no matter what your ailment may be, call, it costs you nothing.

Remember, this free offer is for this visit only.

Married ladies come with their husbands and minors with their parents.

Character in Reading.

The Youth's Companion does more than entertain: it affords the reader a mental and moral tonic. Its stories are not only well told, contributed by the best writers of stories, but they maintain the standards, reflect the ideals of the best homes. They do not throw a false glamour over the tawdry things of life. Rather do they depict the courageous, the healthful, the simple—the true life of the greater number with their adventures, their conflicts of temperament, their failures and successes. In 1917 The Companion will print 12 serials and story groups besides fully 250 single stories and sketches, all for $2.00. The Forecast for 1917, which we will send on request, tells all about the great features of the coming volume.

Old Timers Lost In Storm.

Waves which rolled mountain high on the great lakes Friday night and Saturday carried two boats to the bottom and swept six of the crew of one of the vessels from the rigging into the water where they were drowned, according to reports reaching Detroit last Saturday.

Only the captain of the barge D. L. Filer, coal laden, Buffalo to Saugatuck, Michigan, escaped death in the terrific gale which swept Lake Erie. On reaching Bar Point today, Capt. John Mattison, of Muskegon, who commanded the Filer, told of the two-hour fight against the wavea and how all his men were swept into the lake. He was so exhausted that he was unable to return to his home today. The Filer foundered after reaching Bar Point.

The other boat which went down was the lumber steamer Marshall F. Butters. It sank in Lake Erie off Leamington, Ontario, but the crew was rescued by the steamer Billinga and the F. C. Hartwell, which were nearby.

Ellsworth Section

A large congregation attended services at the Methodist church Sunday afternoon. Most of the time allotted for services was given up to an appeal for Mission money for the suffering Assyrian and Armenian peoples of the far east many of whom are starving daily. All are asked to give what they can for this work next Sunday.

The local creamery is still keeping up their good pace set this summer in the matter of amount of cream collected and money paid to the farmers every week. This is a permanent location in the village and should be patronized by every farmer that can see his way clear to do so. Build up the creamery and you will build up the town and country all about. We will endeavor to give a quite extensive statement of the company's business at the end of the year so the people may see to what an extent this enterprise is a benefit to the town and township.

SPEECH OF THEODORE ROOSEVELT AT WILKES-BARRE, PA.

He says that it would have been "futile" to show courage and stand up for the right. From the standpoint of the nation, the worst type of futility in a President is to fail to stand up for the right. President Wilson felt it was futile to oppose these men, exactly as President Buchanan, his spiritual forbear, felt in 1860, that it was futile, to oppose secession. That type of futility gives the real measure of the man who practices it. What Buchanan considered futile Lincoln made heroic.

I champion Mr. Hughes as against Mr. Wilson because in every such crisis Mr. Wilson, by his public acts, has shown that he will yield to fear, that he will not yield to justice; whereas the public acts of Mr. Hughes have proved him to be incapable of yielding in such a crisis to any threat, whether made by politicians, corporations or labor leaders.

I have always stood for the rights of labor. You miners before me know that. I stood for you, and I incurred the hostility of the greatest financial powers of the land by so doing, and I have felt that hostility in public life ever since. But I did not care, because I knew that my course was right. I stood by you because I believed you were right. If I had been the type of man who was willing to stand by you when you were wrong, I would never have dared to stand by you when you were right, against such opposition as at that time I encountered. I have stood for shorter hours of labor. I have stood for a better wage for the laborer, for better housing conditions; for giving the laboring wage-worker better living conditions and better and safer working conditions. I have stood to give him and his wife and children the chance to make of themselves all that American citizens should make of themselves. I have stood, and always shall stand, for everything in the interest of justice for the laboring man. But I have always stood, and always shall stand, against yielding anything through fear or because of threats. I believe in the great principle of arbitration. I believe in invoking the action of the government to help labor; but I also believe to invoke such action will in the end be ruinous to labor, as well as to the country, if it is not exercised with wisdom and fearlessness and the spirit of exact justice to all the parties concerned. If these questions are not settled right, then some time they will have to be unsettled, and infinite trouble is thereby laid up for us in the future. The only way we can settle them right is by deliberation, after all the facts have been put before a disinterested and competent body, and the judgment of that body obtained thereon. This is the course that we now ought to be pursued as regards the Adamson bill. Its operation has been deferred until after Congress assembles. Congress should hold it up until a proper commission shall investigate the entire subject; and then the Adamson bill should be enacted either unchanged, or with whatever changes and additions the report of such dispassionate commission may show to be desirable and necessary.

Labor leaders who are shortsighted may at the moment get from a man in public office who is not actuated by justice, more than from a man who is actuated by justice. But the laboring people as a whole cannot afford to accept such gains. If unjust legislation is given them for improper reasons, then unjust legislation against them may be enacted for improper reasons. More than any other people in the country the wage workers should insist on just and fair action. There is grave reason to believe that in the course President Wilson has followed he did violence to his own real convictions. Until he became a candidate for office, he was a bitter, ungenerous and often unjust critic of labor unions. I have before me speeches and letters of his made and written in 1905, 1907 and 1909, in which Mr. Wilson says among other things that "labor unions drag the highest man down to the level of the lowest," and in speaking of the capitalistic class, he says that "there is another equally formidable enemy and it is that class formed by the labor leaders of this country," and again "I am a fierce partisan of the open shop," and again "The usual standard of the employee in our day is to give as little as he can for his wages. Labor is standardized by trade unions and this is the standard to which it is made to conform. I need not point out how economically disastrous such regulation of labor is. Our economic supremacy may be lost because the country grows more and more full of unprofitable servants." These were the utterances of Mr. Wilson when he was president of a university and had neither fear of nor desire to profit by the labor vote. In Mr. Wilson's "History of the American People" he explicitly stated that the Chinese ought not to be excluded from this country because it is better to have them here than it is to have the immigrants we now get from Europe. His words were: "The Chinese are more to be desired as workmen than most of the coarse crew that come crowding in everywhere at the Eastern ports." Now he terms round and says: "Our gates must be kept open" to those whom he thus denominated a "coarse crew." Since he went into politics he has again and again, incessantly and contiuously, reversed himself on what he had professed to be his deepest convictions prior to entering politics, and in each case the announced change of conviction agreed with what at the moment seemed to be his political interests.

If it is alleged that President Wilson has been actuated only by principle in connection with the Adamson law, then I ask why he has failed to apply the same principle to the railway postal clerks, where he has full power. Estimating six days to the week, these postal clerks, operating between New York and Pittsburgh, are required to run 208 miles per day (for the present administration has reduced the number of crews from six to five), whereas the present trainmen's agreement requires only 155 miles per day, which is to be reduced still further by the Adamson law. The only possible explanation of Mr. Wilson's action in one case and inaction in the other is that only 400 men are affected in that case where the government has full control of the hours of labor, whereas 400,000 men are supposed to be affected by the Adamson bill.

SPRINGVALE SCHOOL NOTES

We call our school room Busyville,
We all work with a right good will,
To keep our city very nest,
By sweeping mud from off our feet.

We call the aisles between the seats,
By the names of presidents, our streets;
And every evening just at four,
Somebody comes with a rap at our door.

It is the street commissioner we see,
Looking for houses disorderly;
And now the paper boy's gone past,
We all leave Busyville at last.

Wesley Sage died Wednesday night of infantile paralysis, making the second fatal case of this disease in this vicinity.

Thelma Milford, Foster Weinberg and Louise White were absent from school last week on account of illness.

Three new pupils have entered school, making our enrollment 11 now.

F. R. Bulow has recovered from his recent illness of tonsilitis.

H. E. Shaffer and family moved to Grand Rapids last week.

Elizobeth Green spent a few days last week with Nellie Conkright.

The primary grades have been using the sand table in connection with language and geography work.

The sixth grade has been making booklets for language, showing the life of the Indians by means of illustrations and stories.

Our drawing lesson last Friday consisted of painted landscapes by the grammar grades and Indian baby paper dolls to be used for spelling holders by the primary graders.

We are still making those Farm Loans on easy terms and cheap rates. Come in and see us. Citizens. Bank. Adv. 35tf

DANGERS OF A COLD

Charlevoix People Will Do Well to Heed Them.

Many bad cases of kidney trouble result from a cold or chill. Congested kidneys fall behind in filtering the poison-laden blood and backache, headache, dizziness and disordered kidney action follow. Don't neglect a cold. Use Doan's Kidney Pills at the first sign of kidney trouble. Follow this Charlevoix resident's example:

H. R. Fox, carpenter, 205 Park Ave., Charlevoix, says: "Sometimes when I catch cold or do too much stooping or bending, my kidneys get out of shape and my back becomes lame. Whenever I get these attacks I feel rather tired all over my body but Doan's Kidney Pills straighten me up in good shape."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. Fox had. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

A WORD FOR MOTHERS

It is a grave mistake for mothers to neglect their aches and pains and suffer in silence—this only leads to chronic sickness and often shortens life.

If your work is tiring; if your nerves are excitable; if you feel languid, weary or depressed, you should know that Scott's Emulsion overcomes just such conditions.

It possesses in concentrated form the very elements to invigorate the blood, strengthen the tissues, nourish the nerves and build strength.

Scott's is strengthening thousands of mothers—and will help you. No alcohol.

FARMERS WHO HAVE MADE GOOD RECORDS

Crops That Have Paid Big Profits This Year Are Beans and Potatoes

Below we will print a few records of prosperous farmers of this section showing what they have done in the way of crop raising the past year. In spite of the dry weather which shortened the crop to about half in most cases all farmers in this section have had a bountiful harvest.

Eugene Best, Ellsworth, R. F. D. No. 1—40 acres of land, not all under cultivation. Sold beans to the amount of $548.95 besides keeping enough for seed and his own use. Has a goodly quantity of potatoes not yet determined. Pastured ten head of cattle during the year. Good crop of wheat, hay, oats, and all crops usually raised by farmers of this section. This is a good record for a 40 acre ferm and shows the ebility of the farmer.

John Boss, Charlevoix, R. F. D. No. 1, Marion township—40 acres of land. 103 bushels of oats, 65 bushels rye, 250 bushels of corn, quantity of hay and cash crop of beans and potatoes to the amount of $800. This shows Marion township land is as good as in Banks townahip.

Fred Boss, Cherlevoix, R. F. D. No. 1, Marion township—Off 11 acres of land out of a 40 which Mr. Boss worka he has taken beens to the amount of $375 off six and one-half acres and potatoes to the amount of 700 bushels off the remaining four and one-half aeres,. Meking a total cesh crop for this year off the 11 eeres of $1,075. Hard to beet.

Teking into consideration the lnrger farms of the township end neighboring townships one must compare the following list of products raised by E. Vanderark, of Ellsworth, R. F. D. No. 1, one of our best farmers: 110 acres, 600 bushels potstoes off four acres worth at the present price $660. 200 bushels beens off 17 acres worth at the present price $1,000, making e caah crop of $1,660. Raised 140 bushels wheat, 120 bushels rye, 320 bushels osts, 40 tons hay, 425 bushels eorn besides filling large silo; sold $200 worth of cattle, pastured 21 hend of stock end five horses.

Who is next? Would be glad to publish nny others furnished.

Yes, I nm a candidate again. Asking your votes on November seventh next for another term as probate judge. Nearly eight years I have handled the work of this important office and I honestly believe have given it the attention it deserves. I frankly admit that some of the work of the first year's service seems very crude to me now. The experience I have gained is at your serviee if you desire to retain me in this office. I can promise you no more than I did the first time, just a good straight business administration of nffairs with nothing magnetie or spectacular. To anyone interested I ean show that for sevcral years a big saving has been made in the handling of all estates. Matters of great importance come before the probate court nnd I am very sure all cases hnndled by this court are decided on tha merits of each individual casa without considering whether the ease is from a friend, a foe, a Republican or a Democrat. Many nice things hsve been said about the way the work is now handled in the probate office. These words so kindly spoken by the good people of our county are an incentive for better work in the future. Again I thnnk you.

CENTRAL LAKE POSTMASTER BLOWS OUT HIS BRAINS

Walbrecht Dies as Inspector Enters Office.

F. Raymond Walbrecht, for the past year postmaster at Central Lake, shot and killed himself at the post office Tuesday morning, October 17, at about nine o'clock. He did not die immediately but lingered on until about noon.

The cause of the shooting was presumably an unexpected visit of the post office inspector. No shortage has been disclosed as yet, however, and the peculiar feature of the suicide is that the dead man had no reason to be short in his accounts, as his parents were well to do and he had considerable money in his own name. He was well respected and liked in the community, being a member of the Masonic and Knights of Pythias lodges and prominent in business, political and social circles.

Mr. Walbreeht was 26 years of age and the son of A. F. Walbrecht, who owns and operates the power plant, the roller mill and various other industries in and near the village of Central Lake. Besides his parents be is survlved by two brotbers, Gus of Washburn, North Dakota, and Howard of Cbicago, two sisters, Mrs. Martin Smith and little Helen of Central Lake. The affair is a tragedy of large proportions and extreme sadness and the sorrowing relatives and friends are entitled to the deepest sympathy of all. The funeral was held Thursday morning.

P. M. ROAD AS BUTCHER SLAYS COWS SATURDAY

North Bound Train Ploughs Into Fresh Meat Near Ellsworth.

The north bound local from Grand Rapids hit two stray cows just this side of Ellsworth, Saturday night and did a better job than some butchers are capable of—at least more thorough. One of the animals was hurled completely from the track, and though killed outright, was not badly mangled. The other was draggad for more than 175 feet and pretty badly wound up in the machinery of the locomotive when the train finally stopped. Passengers on the train were not aware that anything had happened until some one got out and investigated. Before the train got under way again the cow first struck by the train was being carved up for steaks by certain of the farsighted bystanders. Isn't it funny how a man will neglect his line fences and then howl about the ruthless railroad corporation that so heartlessly robs him of his liva stock.

FIRE AND SMOKE RUIN BUILDING

LOSS OF CONTENTS FALLS HEAVILY ON OWNERS

Cigar Factory of Brecken and Feuless and Lemieur's Barber Shop Badly Gutted by Fire.

On Monday evening last, at about seven o'clock, fire started in the building occupied in the front part by Peter Lemieur's barber shop and in the rear by the cigar factory of Bracken & Fenless. Pete was shaving a customer in the front room and the two were the only occupants of the building, when a passer-by, noticing smoke pouring out of the side door into the little alley between the buildings, rushed in, startling Pete, who in his excitement nearly cut his customer's throat, and the room in the rear was discovered in a mass of flames. How it started is not known, but probably a spark from the stove in the factory room started the blaze. With the assistance of some members of the crowd, now rapidly gathering, an attempt was made to save some of the furnishings and a few of the small articles in the barber shop and the three chairs were finally rescued from the flames, although it was necessary for the rescuers to crawl on their hands and knees, so thick by this time was the smoke, to get out the third chair.

By this time the fire laddies had arrived, headed by their intrepid chief, and although the fire was still confined to the inside of the building at the time they got there, huge columns of smoke were rolling across the street, nearly smothering the crowd of onlookers. Some delay was experienced in starting the water and by the time the firemen had crawled onto the roof of the Chocolate Shop next door, with the hose, the flames were bursting through the shingles of the little barber-cigar shop.

The first dash of water got the fire demon under partial control and the sides of the adjoining building thoroughly soaked, resisted the action of the flying sparks. The fight was continued throughout the evening, however, and the firemen, lucky in having but little wind to hamper their efforts, secured the complete mastery of the situation at about eleven o'clock and by midnight the last spark was quenched. A driving rain starting up about this time lent them valuable assistance.

Seven hundred dollars insurance only partially covered the loss of Messrs. Bracken and Feuless, as the cigar shop was completely cleaned out, large numbers of cigars made up and ready for the trade being destroyed as well as a quantity of raw leaf. Five hundred dollars was held on the barber shop, but the fact that so much of its contents was saved lightened the burden for its proprietor. The stands for utensils in front of the chairs, being on the leeward side of the building, were not badly damaged and may be completely salvaged.

This is but another one of the long list of bad fires that have occurred in the past yew years along this unsightly row of fire traps and only emphasizes Charlevoix's great need of a more enlightened public spirit and better understanding of civic duty among its owners of business property. We are not only tempting providence and inviting a devastating visitation of the fire scourge under less favorable conditions then those which prevailed Monday night, but we are allowing to remain on our only business street a disgraceful blotch, the influence of which on the prosperity and success of our town has its actual measurement in cold, hard cash.

The best little city anywhere, like other towns of its kind all over the country, is largely judged and measured by its business property. Many visitors to this city, possible prospective purchasers of property or business men who might be induced to locate here, gain their first, perhaps only and lasting impression of our town from what they can see of it in the immediate neighborhood of their hotel. They have not always the time nor (and certainly they might be pardoned for this lack, considering what they first see) the inclination to seek out our imposing residential sections and have their first convictions counteracted.

It is high time that the unworthy desire of some of us to squeeze an extra dollar or two out of the rent game at the expense of the rest of us should be side-tracked to make way for the "Prosperity Limited" of public spirited co-operation which will bring to all of us a greater return in the fruits of our labors.

ANOTHER SCHOOL RECEIVES PLATE

FIRST STANDARD SCHOOL IN MARION TOWNSHIP

Patrons of Marion No. 6, Phelps, Celebrate Turning Point in History of the School.

On the evening of Thursday, the 26th of October, the patrons of Phelps, Marion No. 6, gathered to celebrate the turning point in the history of their school. They have met all of the requirements of the state inspection of last spring except the planting of a few trees to beautify the school yard. The state superintendent granted that the tree planting might be done in the spring and the plate granted this fall.

Sometimes there is not a great deal to do to get a school in shape and yet it is a great step from a poor school or a mediocre school to a truly good school. It is breaking away from old habits and taking a step in the right direction. For this reason the school director, Harmon Himebauch, and his assistant officers, Richard O'Neil and Mr. Balch are to be congratulated in having their school on record at the capitol. The teacher, Miss LaCount, taught last year in a standard school in Chandler township and fully realized the advantages which her pupils would receive from the movement which the district fathers had taken. She had therefore prepared a fitting program for the event with recitations, pantomime and song.

Superintendent Craig, of Charlevoix, was kind enough to throw all other work aside and hie himself to Phelps over the rough muddy roads to participate in the event and deliver the address of the evening.

Delicious refreshments were served, sandwiches, cake, wafers and coffee. Of course it tasted good and everybody felt good so you may rest assured that everybody there had a good time.

Because good boys and girls are better even than good school buildings, this school building was dedicated like the other standard schools, to truth and health symbolic of right. When the plate was presented to the district in behalf of the state superintendent of public instruction the boys and girls yelled loudly and well:

"We're a standard school all right,
Hear us yell with all our might,
Blue and white, blue and white,
Rah! Rah! Right! ! ! !

MOST BRILLIANT SOCIAL AFFAIR

JUNIOR MASQUERADE PARTY A GREAT SUCCESS

Masonic Temple Suitably Decorated for Occasion—Prize Winners of the Evening.

One of the most brilliant social affairs of the Hallowe'en season was the occasion of the junior masquerade given at the Masonic temple on Friday evening, October 27.

Festoons of autumn leaves intermingled with grinning pumpkins and black cat appointments decorated the walls and at one end a conspicious sign read "Juniors." Corn stalks and pumpkins featured throughout in all the decorations and a general Hallowe'en atmosphere was erected.

After the preliminaries a grand march was struck and led off by Robert Bridge and Miss Cole. The evening was spent in dancing, fortune telling and various Hallowe'en games.

The members of the faculty present were: Mr. Craig, Mr. Beddow, Mr. Loomis, Miss Margaret Allen, Miss Beatrice Allen and Miss Finucan and Miss Cole. The costumes were exceptionally attractive and appropriate for such an event. The honor of "best appearing" couple was given to President Widdifield and Miss Irene Auld. The couple receiving the honor of being the most "ridiculous appearing" was awarded to Mr. Leo Butler and Miss Bernice Bush.

The strains of "Home Sweet Home" came too soon, but midnight closed the enjoyable evening, everyone going home with a smile on his face expressing the best time ever.

FIRST SNOW FALL WITH HIGH WINDS

CHARLEVOIX GETS FIRST TOUCH OF WINTER

High Winds, Snow and Rain Paralyzed Business Practically Every Day of Last Week.

Jack Frost was here last Thursday.

If you don't believe it, ask any person who attempted to go about attending to business on Thursday last. The first real snow of the season fell accompanied by a northeaster. The snow, of course, was not heavy enough to mantle the earth, but there was just enough of it to make some men wonder what they had done with their summer wages. There were flurries of snow during the day, mixed at times with a fine drizzling rain. And the wind—well, it blew some—and then some more.

The disagreeable weather continued until Saturday, when for a few hours the sun shone. Sunday morning opened with promise of a good day, but about nine o'clock the rain began to fall and continued through the balance of the day and well into the night. October has been a disagreeable month with its continued high winds and rain.

Charlevoix, however, was not the only city who had its first taste of winter Thursday. From all points of the state come reports that an old-fashioned blizzard kept citizens indoors all day, and greatly hindered traffic on the lakes. In some places the street car and interurban system was put out of business for several hours.

SNEAK THIEF RANSACKS HOUSE

NEARLY CAUGHT IN ACT BY ITS OCCUPANTS

West Mason Street Home Entered Between Hours of Five and Six —Nothing Taken.

Last Wednesday evening at about half past five o'clock, a sneak thief entered the Daniels cottage on West Mason street and ransacked the house, opening bureau drawers and clothes closets and strewing their contents about the rooms evidently in a search for money. Jack Weikel of the Courier force occupies the house and when Mrs. Weikel returned at half past five from a shopping expedition, she found every light in the house lit and the door ajar. Thinking that her husband had returned from work a little earlier than usual and was somewhere about the place, she started a fire in the range, commenced preparations for supper and then left the house to go to a neighbors.

She returned about the same time as her husband. As he entered the door, Mrs. Weikel caught sight of the thief standing in the shadows of a doorway where he had stepped back out of sight at her approach, and gave a scream, which attracted her husband's attention allowing the thief an opportunity to dart through the door behind his back. Mr. Weikel saw him, however, in time to give pursuit, but the thief concealed himself in an outbuilding and a thorough search of the premises failed to disclose his whereabouts, and when things had quited down he probably made his escape through the next yard. He must have been at all times so close to his pursuers in his hiding place as to have reached out and touched them.

The case was reported to Sheriff Novak too late to make practicable the use of the county's new bloodhound, but the sheriff has his suspicions and a certain party will be closely watched for further developments.

It will be well to keep your doors locked, as while Charlevoix is a good little town, it does not quite approach the law abidingness of ancient England in the days of the good King Alfred the Great, when golden bracelets and other valuables might be hung on the trees by the roadside and remain unmolested.

ENJOYED SCENERY

Local Men Speak Highly of Scenes On Lake Superior.

Andrew McCall, Sr., and Harry Powers arrived Monday morning from Michepicotan Harbor, a point on Lake Superior about 60 miles from the Soo on the Canadian side, where they have been gathering spawn for the Caledonian hatchery of Caledonia, New York. Andy says the lakes up there are 200 feet above the level of Superior and simply swarm with rainbow trout. Rock cliffs, some 400 feet in heighth, make the place one of the scenic wonders of the Superior region. Mr. McCall goes to Leland today to work for A. T. Stewart of the local hatchery.

MICHIGAN VOICE OF LIQUOR TRADE

IS A FORMER LEADER OF THE WET FORCES

Served Several Terms in State Legislature as Representative from Benzie County.

Perry F. Powers in the Cadillac News has the following interesting information about the resonant individual who signs his name to the liquor trade advertising now visible in newspapers—Dwight G. F. Warner—he says:

Mr. Warner was a former resident of Benzie county, in the village of Frankfort. From that county he was sent to the legislature for two or three terms. While in the legislature Mr. Warner was utilized as a leader of the wet forces and when his last term as a member of the legislature was concluded he became an employe of the organization that directs the movements of campaigns in Michigan against local option and against all forms of liquor opposition.

The county in which Mr. Warner formerly lived is one of the successful dry counties of the state, and the city and county in which he now lives, Lansing and Ingham county, greatly increased their dry majority after several years' experience with the conditions which Mr. Warner is so vehemently opposed to.

As campaign manager of the Michigan Home Rule League, Mr. Warner demands to know whether it is the purpose of the prohibitionists to have this state flooded with liquor from Ohio, Indiana, Pennsylvania, and New York and certain parts of Canada?

This question can be very promptly and frankly replied to. If Michigan is flooded with liquor from any of the states named, the offense be refers to will be committed by the very persons who are helping to pay his salary; by the very persons who he is representing when he gives utterance to that pretended protest.

Mr. Warner has been opposed to every law and every part of a law that would disturb in the slightest a single saloon or a thousand of them. He is representing the brewers of Detroit in asking that they be permitted to impose their hand of "home rule" on the people of Wexford county and of Benzie county.

Mr. Warner says: "I am for Home Rule because I believe in local self-government in all matters pertaining to local affairs and because I know that it is detrimental to our American form of government to force the opinions of one community upon another."

And when he made this statement Mr. D. G. F. Warner knew that the organization he represents actually exists for the sole purpose of forcing the opinions of one community upon another.

The brewers of Detroit and Toledo and St. Louis and Milwaukee are the persons that are paying the expenses of the Michigan Home Rule League. They are trying to force conditions upon Wexford county and upon other Michigan counties which the voters of these counties have deliberately rejected.

The same element that is corrupting and debauching the primary elections of Detroit are back of the effort to force their brand of "Home Rule" upon the whole people of Michigan.

Think of a representative of that organization pretending to pose as favorable or unfavorable to anything "because it is detrimental to our American form of government."

Building Operations Lively.

H. D. Marshall is putting in two septic tanks for the Charlevoix Summer Home association on Breezy Point with discharge into Pine river. He also has the contract for excavating the basement on the Armstrong property on Nicholls street, where a fine new cottage will be erected to replace the old building which is to be removed. Mr. Marshall stated Tuesday on the paving job back of the Blanchard Hardware Co. building, it being the intention to concrete this alley for its entire length.

Baptist Revival.

"I COULD NOT DO MY WORK AS I SHOULD, BUT TANLAC PUT NEW ENERGY INTO ME"

"I was simply in a run down condition," said W. L. Couson, a tool-worker in the Buick Automobile Factory and living at 801 Crapo Street, Flint, talking to Mr. Copp, the Tanlac man, "my stomach was weak and I could not eat the simplest things and digest them properly. Gas formed in my stomach causing me a great deal of pain. Of course I had to eat something to be able to do my work as I should.

"I had always been averse to taking patent medicines, but when I was so miserable and did not seem to get relief from things I tried my wife asked me to try Tanlac as she had seen it so widely endorsed by her friends as well as others and she said she did not like to see me going around feeling so badly all the time. At first I demurred, but finally, more to please her than from any faith I had in the remedy, I got a bottle.

"I am not opposed to patent medicines any more if they are all as beneficial as Tanlac, because I can say with confidence that it has done me a world of good. I can eat all I want and I sleep like a top. My stomach now feels fine, no more uncomfortable accumulation of gas to distress me after my meals. I feel good all around.

"I can say for Tanlac, that I recommend it as a good tonic to anyone wanting to be built up, and I speak from experience as I can now do my work as I should."

TANLAC CAN BE OBTAINED HERE ONLY AT THE STORE OF B. A. HERMAN.

Tanlac can also be obtained at the following stores: W. A. Hyslop at Boyne City, F. J. Fessender at Central Lake.

Breaks Diving Record.

Deep sea diving records were smashed at Traverse City when B. F. Leavitt, of Toledo, Ohio, in a manganese bronze diving suit invented by him went down to a depth of 310 feet in Grand Traverse bay and stayed under water for 39 minutes without discomfort. He carried an oxygen tank on his back from which he received air. The experiment was made in the presence of C. A. Shirley and other divers and was pronounced a success. Next spring an effort will be made to salvage a cargo of 100,000 copper ingots that went down off Northport years ago in 200 feet of water.

Born, to Mr. and Mrs. Peter Nasson, a boy, last Sunday morning.

Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Cincush and family of South Arm visited at the home of John Nasson, Sunday.

The continued rainy weather has handicapped the farmer in harvesting his sugar beet and potato crop.

Road Commissioner Horace Hipp has completed the grading to Wetzels' corner, as this is as far as his road will go. Mr. Hammond will build to here next summer.

The bean crop isn't coming up to expectations for yield this year. But the price is doubled from other years prices. Potatoes are also a light crop but the prices hold true with potatoes as with beans. A bumper crop yields the least money and hardest labor for the farmer.

UNSHAKEN TESTIMONY

Time is the test of truth. And Doan's Kidney Pills have stood the test in Charlevoix. No Charlevoix resident who suffers backache, or annoying urinary ills can remain unconvinced by this twice-told testimony.

Mrs. John Hull, 102 W. Lincoln Ave., Charlevoix, says: "I gladly recommend Doan's Kidney Pills for they have done me worlds of good. I suffered from an attack of lumbago. I tried various remedies but got no relief until I used Doan's Kidney Pills. In a short time they entirely removed the trouble. A short time ago my back and kidneys troubled me again, but Doan's Kidney Pills brought me relief promptly." (Statement given October 26, 1911.)

On October 5, 1916, Mrs. Hull said: "I can speak just as highly of Doan's Kidney Pills as I did when I recommended them before. I use this medicine occasionally as a tonic and it keeps my back and kidneys in good condition."

HAYES

Everybody is busy.

Ivy Lewis and her lady friend, of Petoskey, were callers at the home of her uncle, Jones Lewis, and her sister.

Fay Kane has sold two bags of beans which brought him $25.00. Farmers are getting good prices for beans, potatoes and grain, but they are not making anything at that, for everything they buy has such high prices also.

SCHOOL NOTES

Thursday afternoon Mr. Upshaw gave a 15 minute talk (from ten minutes after three until four four o'clock). His subject was "Let nothing discourage you—never give up!"

Charlevoix high school expects to play the Harbor Springs foot ball team here Thursday.

One thing that sounds good to the student body is the announcement made by Coach Loomis. He says that a general remodeling of the team will be well under way by the time the referee's starting whistle blows again. Butler has been shifted to the centre and Hyk from the half-back position to tackle. Hyk is expected to strengthen the line a great deal. Byers was shifted from the tackle position to the back line and so far in practice has made a fine showing.

At the present writing Jack Supernaw is still on his malted milk diet. He has startad making them himself now, with the intentions of putting George Glados in bankruptcy.

We would suggest that the Junior editor of two weeks past be better versed on the words of Edgar Allan Poe before another undertaking.

The answer to last week's problem is 479,001,600 different arrangements.

The following is an approximate copy of a letter received at the high school, soliciting aid for an injured man.

Dear Sir:

Mr. A— is injured and unable to care for his family. Will you please send 10c to B—, who will see that it gets to Mr. A—. Also send five letters with the number next above that at the top of this letter, to five of your friends, asking them to do the same. This chain will stop when number 50 is reached.

If everyone responds and under the circumstances they surely will, enough will be realized to keep Mr. A— comfortable while he is with us.

Yours cordially,

How much money would be received to keep Mr. A— comfortable if everyone responded?

PERSISTENCY.

The chief reason that everybody is not successful is the fact that he has not enough persistency. I always advise young men to do one thing well, throwing all their energies into it.—John Wanamaker.

RHEUMATISM ARRESTED

Many people suffer the tortures of lame muscles and stiffened joints because of impurities in the blood, and each succeeding attack seems more acute until rheumatism has invaded the whole system.

To arrest rheumatism it is quite as important to improve your general health as to purify your blood, and the cod liver oil in Scott's Emulsion is nature's great blood-maker, while its medicinal nourishment strengthens the organs to expel the impurities and upbuild your strength.

Scott's Emulsion is helping thousands every day who could not find other relief. Refuse the alcoholic substitutes.

HOW THE FISHERMAN SHOULD HANDLE HIS SHORT BAIT CASTING ROD.

The successful fisherman is one who is familiar with the habits of the fish he seeks, and it is to his advantage to be acquainted with the waters which he intends to explore. In early spring the water is cool, and bass can be found in the shallows during the day. The likely places should be near the sheltering rocks in shoal water or near old stumps and submerged branches. Pickerel also make for the warm waters during the day, and in casting during the early months of the season work the shoal places well.

The fish at this time feed on minnows and helgramites below the surface, and the logical bait to use is the underwater type. Two styles of bait casting are used, the overhead and the underhand casts, and it would be well for the angler to master both. The underhand cast is made by reeling in the bait until it is within six inches or so of the tip of the rod. The click and drag are released and the ball of the thumb is firmly pressed on the line of the spool. The rod is swung across the body to the rear, the tip being level with the angler's breast, then brought smartly forward across the body in the desired direction, while the thumb is partly eased to allow the line to run freely.

The whole secret of casting lies in thumbing the line, and a few hours of practice should suffice to demonstrate how the trick can be accomplished. The beginner, however, will find it an advantage to practice casting with a full reel, and if the casting line is not sufficiently long enough to fill the spool a quantity of string may be first spooled and the casting line wound on the core thus made. Considerable practice is, of course, necessary before the angler can cast long and accurately, and the thumb must be educated to regulate the speed of the reel and allow it to travel freely, but not overrun.

THE RECORD MADE BY ALCOHOLISM

ALL HOSPITALS ARE CROWDED WITH INSANE AND MENTAL DEFECTIVES FOR CARE.

THE FIGURES ARE STARTLING

Read the Results Feund By the Commission Which Made Its Report To the Legislature.

At tha legislative session of 1913 an act wes passed creating a commission to investigate the extent of feeblemindedness, epilepsy and insanity in Michigan, to determine their causes end to suggest methods wherehy the state could deal with theee evils. That insaulty, feeblemindedneaa and juvanile delinqneney are closely reinted to alcoholism was proved hy the following extracts taken from the printed report of the commission, which was presented to the legislature of 1915:

Could the present day direct influence of alcohol and syphilis be abolished the stete would he relieved of the care of nearly a fourth of the cases of insanity now yearly admitted to the Michigan State Hospitals.

The beneficial effects which would result in other directions from the removal of these two factors alone are impossible to more than surmise; hut witbout doubt there would he a tremendous lessening in future generations of the insanity which develops on the foundation of a defectiva nervous and mental organization such as manic depressive insanity, epilepsy and feeblemindedness.

The Commission is able in this report to consider the influence of alcohol only as it is a cause or factor in the production of the eases of insanity which are admitted to the State Hospitels for the Insane.

It should not escape attention that tha nnmerous eases of alcoholic intoxication and delirium tremens, which are problames of increasing importance in all communities of the state, are also due to the effect of alcohol upon the nervous system. All ara mental disturbances due to alcohol and the casen of insanity admitted to the State Hospitals give only a slight suggestion of its importanca in its relation to tha health of tha individuals and the state.

No thorough study of its influence could warrant any othar conclusion than that it is the most scitve influence present in our social life for the production of poverty, criminality and physical end nervous degeneracy.

Michigan hae no institution for tha special treatment of alcoholic habite or inebriety. A statute enacted by the legislature of 1913 makes it possible for this class to enter the State Hospitals for treatment, but only a small number have been admitted under this act.

In the vicinity of Detroit, two large hospitals, the Wayne County Hospital and St. Joseph's Retreat, annually treat e considereble number of ecute and periodic forms of alcoholic intoxication. Only the more prolonged forms of alcoholic mentel disorders and definitely insane conditions due to alcohol are treated in any numbers in the State Hospitals for the insane. Only exceptionally are cases of delirum tremens admitted.

Alcohol was the direct cause of the insanity of 150 individuals who were admitted to the Michigan Stete Hospitals in the yaer 1913-14. Alcoholic insanity constituted 8.4 per cent of 1,773 patients admitted during that period.

The greater proportion of alcoholic insanity comes from cities of lerger population. Those having a population of 10,000 or more furnish 66.6 per cent of the cases of insanity due to alcohol or drugs.

The indirect influence of alcohol is shown in the occurence of alcoholism of more than ordinery degree among the ancestors and families of 9.9 per cent of all cases of insanity admitted for treatment.

The comparativa frequency of insanity due to alcohol is considerably less in Michigan than in those states in which the population is largely centered in cities. Alcohol was given as tha sole causa in 13.9 per cent of the cases of insanity admitted to the State Hospitals for the insane in Massachusetts in 1914 and in New York 15.1 per cent of the admissions were due to alcohol.

LAMPBLACK QUALITIES.

One of the Best Wearing Pigments Known to Painters.

Lampblack is one of the most permanent pigments. It is composed principally of carbon, with usually a small percentage of mineral matter and moisture present. It has remarkable covering and coloring properties, and it wears like the eternal truth. While it is not exactly jet hlack, having a gray and, in some samples, a sooty appearance, it is, nevertheless, a color of strong individuality uud its use in connection with other pigments is considerable and always to the benefit of the wearing properties of the mixture.

No paint shop stock of supplies is complete without at least a small quantity of refined lampblack. The remarkable wearing properties of this hlack are attested in ancient burial places, where grave markers made of wood and lettered with lampblack show the wood actually worn away while the black letters, standing out as though carved from the timber, remain firm, distinct and intact.

The discharge pipe of the new tower is constructed so that it may be projected into a window or other opening, the end being equipped with a number of nozzles presented in different directions. MANUFACTURED FUEL.

Anthracite and Bituminous Coal Used For Making Briquettes.

Coal briquettes to the amount of 181,859 short tons, valued at the plants at $1,007,327, were manufactured in 1913, according to the United States geological survey. The figures for 1913 show a decrease of 17 per cent in the tonnage of briquettes manufactured, but an increase of over 5½ per cent in value over the figures for 1912. Seventeen briquetting plants were in operation during the year, eight in the eastern states, five in the central states and four on the Pacific coast. Seven of these plants used anthracite culm or "fines," five used bituminous or semibituminous coal, two used carbon residue from oil gas works and the others used mixed coals. Coal tar pitch is the principal binder employed, eight plants using it. Patented binders were used at five plants.

If the future of this infeut relative of the coal mining industry is to be judged by the record of 1913 the judgment should be based on the increase in value rather than on the decrease in plants and in tonnage. Briquetted fuel in the United States is essentially a domestic fuel, for which there was a slackened demand in 1913 owing to the exceptional mildness of the winter of 1912-13 end of last November and December.

Inserting Wires in Gas Pipes.

Inserting electric wires in gas pipes is very difficult, especially if the pipe has any bends in it, says Popular Mechanics. A contractor having one of these pipes in a newel post that had three ninety degree turns easily overcame the trouble by inserting a line for drawing in the wire with the use of a vacuum cleaner. A string was made into a ball almost as large as the inside diameter of the pipe and, fastening one end, the ball was started in the pipe at one end and the smallest nozzle of the cleaner placed over the other end. The ball was quickly sucked through the pipe, leaving a line that was used to draw in the wire.

Cover For a Stair.

A very convenient contrivence for moving heavy articles up and down stairs consists of a door of hard wood so hinged that it will fit down snugly over the steps when in use. When not in use it is turned up against the cellar wall and held there by means of a catch. Barrels, bags, machinery, etc., may be lowered into a basement or elevated to upper floors with comparative ease in this manner.

RIVERS FROM GLACIERS.

These Ice Born Streams Gush Forth Milky White in Color.

Some rivers ere formed hy a rather slow process. Fed by springs or small ponds, they issue forth as mere rivulets to be re-enforced by other streams until they have reached a size that entitles them to be termed rivers. Some, like the St. Lawrence, having their source in some extensive lake, pass through no intermediate state, hut proceed as full fledged rivers directly upon their course to the sea.

Others emerge with a rush and roar from the heart of glaciers located far up on the sides of lofty mountains. The waters of these glacier born rivers are not crystal clear, as many suppose, but are milky white, due to the lava dust and powdered acoria contained in the ice mass. This color the waters retain for miles as they flow through the lowlands, proclaiming their perentage to the observant eye.

From the rugged sides of Mount Rainier, which rises to a height of over 14,000 feet and which John Muir declares America's noblest mountain, twenty glaciers radiate like the arms of a gigantic starfish. From each of these springs a river.

The great Nisqually glacier, one of the largest on the mountain, is 400 feet in height. From a cavern in the ice mass a large stream, called the Nisqually, bursts forth with a boom and goes rushing down the valley and finally empties into the waters of Puget sound. It is seldom indeed that one witnesses the formation of a river under such favorable surroundings.—James G. McCurdy in St. Nicholas.

THE WHITE HOUSE SITE.

What David Burns Had to Say to George Washington About It.

When the land for the present capital was being secured the commissioners appointed by President Washington found it hard to persuade some of the local landholders to part with their fields. In "Walks About Washington" an old story good enough to be true is told about one David Burns, a canny Scot, who held out so long that President Washington personally undertook his conversion. After pointing out to the farmer what advantages he would reap from having the government for a neighbor the great men concluded:

"But for this opportunity, Mr. Burns, you might have died a poor tobacco planter."

"Aye, mon," snapped Burns, "and had ye no married the Widder Custis, wi' all her nagurs, ye'd ha' been a land surveyor the noo and a mighty poor ane at that."

However, when he learned that unless he accepted the liberal terms offered him his land would be condemned and seized at an appraisal probably much lower Burns met the president in quite another mood and to the final question, "Well, sir, what have you concluded to do?" astonished every one by his prompt response:

"Whate'er your excellency wad hae me."

On one of his fields now stands the White House, and an adjacent lot became Lafayette square.

Little Things as an Index.

"Here," said an observer, "was a machine upon which appeared the name plate of the manufacturer, a small and not essential feature. But this plate had been set on true, and then the screws by which it was held in place had all been turned up until the slots in their heads all showed in precisely the same position, alike, uniform.

"Whoever put this plate on made a nice, finished job of it, and I should be inclined to think that a shop that had such pride in even the minor details of its work would do good work throughout."—Pittsburgh Press.

DESTROYING INSECTS.

Missouri College of Agriculture Issues Information For Getting Rid of Pests.

[T. J. Talbert, Missouri station.]

Corn root worms yield best to crop rotation, systematic clean culture and fall plowing.

Garden webworms, cut alfalfa, fine and spin webs over the plant. If your field is badly infested cut the alfalfa and disk the ground.

Wireworms injure corn and potatoes most, but feed freely on wheat and oats. They thrive best in sod ground and may be controlled by crop rotation, fall plowing and good cultivation. So may the grubworms.

Grasshoppers damage field and garden crops and fruit and shade trees. Poison bran mash sowed early in the morning kills them, and their eggs may be destroyed by cultivating pastures, meadows and waste lands late in the fall.

Corn root lice suck the juices from the roots of corn, grasses and weeds. They depend on colonies of small brown ants for protection and transportation and may be controlled by crop rotation, fall plowing and early spring cultivation to destroy weeds and grasses.

The army worm, which eats the leaves of field and garden crops, may be trapped in dusty ditches or killed with poison bran mash sowed broadcast late in the evening. Badly infested meadows should be cut at once to save as much of the hay as possible.

Hessian fly grubs feed between the leaf sheath and the stalk at the crown and lower joints of the plant. Destroy the "flaxseeds" which produce next year's crop by disking and plowing stubble as soon after harvesting as possible. Keep down all volunteer wheat, sow late in the fall and get your neighbors to do the same.

The chinch bugs suck the juices of corn, wheat, sorghums and other plants of the grass family. They may be trapped in dusty ditches if they go from wheat to corn, or in rainy weather an oil or tar barrier may be necessary. If they get to the corn spray it with soapsuds, emulsion or tobacco solutions. The clump forming grasses by roadsides and in waste land may be burned in late fall and early winter to kill chinch bugs which collect there for the winter.

The poison bran mash recommended by the Missouri College of Agriculture for the control of many insect pests is made of half a pound of powdered lead arsenate or half a pound of paris green mixed with ten pounds of wheat bran. Add two gallons of water into which the pulp of two oranges or two lemons has been mixed, together with a quart of molasses or syrup.

Corn Crops Pay.

A number of experiments made in different states show that a really good corn crop pays from $50 to $100 an acre instead of $15 to $20. In addition to this, expert corn growers often add to their profits by selling a high quality of seed to their neighbors and city dealers. It is evident the crop can be made worth much more than ordinary by skill and care.

Vat For Small Flock.

The illustration shows a good type of small dipping vat of about the right size for the average small farm flock. Its construction is simple and fairly cheap. The place for the vat is dug out in the ground and lined with either bricks or cement. The runways should be floored with pine boards, and the fencing may be of any suitable material. Where it is not desirable or possible to buy some one of the many good metal portable dipping vats for small flock use, a permanent tank like this will meet all needs.—Farm Progress.

Sheep For Weeds.

Sheep are the sworn enemies of weeds. They clear up waste vegetation and turn it into mutton. By eating down and trampling the weeds on the fields and along the fences they destroy many insects which harbor in the weeds. If the sheep merely pay for the extra grain given them it is profitable to keep them as scavengers and insecticides.

GET SOME BEES!

Have you bees?

Why waste a honey crop?

Why let your neighbors' bees get your crop?

Buy bees by the pound with a good Italian queen.

Get a few swarms of your own this spring or summer.

Catch runaway swarms and hive them in good hives.

Buy neglected stands of bees and take care of them and give them a chance. The bee is a faithful and deserving creature.

Furnish a neighbor beekeeper with a few good hives, with frames and comb foundation starters and pay him for hiving a few swarms in them for you.

Buy good strong colonies of bees in hives with straight combs. These should be secured from some one known to be reliable and experienced in beekeeping.

Buy a few nuclei from a reliable bee supply man. A nucleus is a part of a colony of bees secured by dividing up a strong colony into two, three or four parts, putting each part in a separate hive to build up into a full colony. —L. Haseman, Missouri Station.

ALCOHOL NOT A MEDICINE

Physicians Find Very Little Use for Alcohol Internally.

A national pharmeceutical publication attracted attention a few months ago by omitting alcohol from its official list of "materia medica." The explanation was that alcohol is no longer recognized as a medicine.

Writing in the New York Department of Health bulletin, Dr. Donald B. Armstrong emphasizes this tendency to banish alcohol from the prescription counter. "No longer," he says, "do therapeutics advocate for a cold that the patient 'go home, retire to his bed after hanging his derby hat on the bedpost, and drink whisky until he can see two hats.' Briefly, it may be said that the modern physician finds very little use for alcohol internally."

This is due, he says, to the discovery that alcohol is not what mankind has thought it. It is not a stimulant at all. In its drug action, it is precisely the opposite—a depressant. It has food value, but as food it is expensive. Ten cents' worth of beer provides 240 calories of food energy, while ten cents' worth of sirloin steak provides 375 calories, ten cents' worth of eggs 450 calories, and ten cents' worth of oatmeal 3,720 calories.

CARNEGIE LIBRARY NOTES

A file of clippings is being put into working order at the library. This will prove a most valuable source of reference material. Some of the headings are: "Cooking," "Houses," "Entertaining," "Building and Furnishing," "Children, Their Care and Culture," "People of Prominence," "Places of Interest," and various other topics.

Several new books have been purchased concerning modern drama. Galsworthy, Tagore, Ibsen, Maeterlinck, Shew, Wilde and others are new on the shelves.

A collection of books on business was put in circulation this summer. Surely some of them will be just what you need to help you. Look them over. Don't forget that the library is yours. Let us know what you want to find there. Use what we have and help others to get the habit of going to this source for help, entertainment and recreation.

Worth Careful Thought

Do you read the label to know whether your baking powder is made from cream of tartar or, on the other hand, from alum or phosphate?

Royal Baking Powder is made from cream of tartar, derived from grapes, and adds to the food only wholesome qualities.

Other baking powders contain alum or phosphate, both of mineral origin, and used as substitutes for cream of tartar because of their cheapness.

Never sacrifice quality and healthfulness for low price.

WHO "KEPT US OUT OF WAR?"

Who "Kept Us Out of War?"

Ans. William Howard Taft, Republican, president of the United States from 1909 to 1913.

Who "Kept Us Out of War?"

Ans. Theodore Roosevelt, Republicnn, president of the United States from 1901 to 1909.

Who "Kept Us Out of War?"

Ans. Not William McKinley, president of the United States from 1897 to 1901. It wns under his administration that the American people freed poor, downtrodden Cuba from the cruel yoke of Spain. We went into Cuba in the name of humanity, and added another free government to civilization and the world. Who is there now who will say that we should have stayed out of Cuba and "kept out of war?" Let the craven answer.

Who "Kept Us Out of War?"

Ans. Grover Cleveland, Democrat, president of the United States from 1885 to 1889 and from 1893 to 1897. His sturdy Americanism and his insistence that American citizens the world over would have the full protection of this government prevented gross indignities being offered us which would have left us no alternative but war.

Who "Kept Us Out of War?"

Ans. Benjamin Harrison, Republican, president of the United States from 1889 to 1893.

Who "Kept Us Out of War?"

Ans. James A. Garfield and Chester A. Arthur, Republicans, presidents of the United States from 1881 to 1885.

Who "Kept Us Out of War?"

Ans. Rutherford B. Hayes, Republican, president of the United States from 1877 to 1881.

Who "Kept Us Out of War?"

Ans. Ulysses S. Grant, Republican, president of the United States from 1869 to 1877. Although he had as great a part as any one, except Lincoln, in putting down the Rebellion, and was one of the world's greatest military strategists, he was the man who, after victory, begged his countrymen to "Let us have peace."

Who "Kept Us Out of War?"

Ans. Not Abraham Lincoln, Republican, president of the United States from 1861 to 1865. In his first inaugural address, he pleaded with those who were bent upon destroying this nation, "Though passion may have strained, it must not break our bonds of affection." But the die was then cast. Seven states had already served notice that they had seceded from the Union. Lincoln's choice was between a dissolution of the Union and a civil war. Lincoln saved the Union and struck the shackles from four million human beings. Who will now say that Lincoln should have "kept us out of war?" Let the craven answer.

Who "Kept Us Out of War?"

Ans. Every president of the United States for 70 years except Lincoln and McKinley and all with honor.

Has Mr. Wilson "Kept Us Out of War?"

Ans. On April 20, 1914, by his direction, our navy shelled and captured Vera Cruz, the principal seaport of Mexico. NINETEEN AMERICAN MARINES WERE KILLED AND 70 WOUNDED. The Mexican loss was 126 killed and 195 wounded.

At the battle of Carrizal, Mexico, between our troops and those of Carranza, 23 American soldiers were killed and many wounded; Mexican loss unknown.

We are now threatened with invasion. President Wilson refuses to recall the militin from Texas. WHY? This is his answer to Governor Whitman of New York, who urged him to let the men come back to vote. Said the president:

> "The militia have been used and are being used to repel invasion and are rendering services of the highest quality and most urgently needed character to their country."

If this is peace, then should the name of Woodrow Wilson be added to the list of those who have "kept us out of war," but at a sacrifice of national honor?

There is no merit in the Wilson plea that he has kept us out of war. As a campaign slogan it is an attempt to secure votes under false pretenses—the bold operation of a politicnl confidence game.

LET US THEN LEARN THIS LESSON: The Republican party has shown by its past achievements that it is most capable of meeting the crisis of government. It is the party of peace, progress, patriotism, prosperity and protection.

SHOWING UP THE GERM

Persons who see disease in dinner delicacies, bacteria in breakfasts and germs in everything should take consolation from the testimony of Dr. Arthur Warren Waite, tried for the murder of his father-in-law.

Waite was a dentist with a fondness for bacteriology and a compelling desire to dispose of his wife's relatives in order that he might profit by their estates. When they came to visit his home he fed them upon a diet which his studies had convinced him would bring the desired funerals and fortunes. To his sister-in-law he administered germs of typhoid, diphtheria, influenza, pneumonia and other diseases. After a slight illness, due to her unsuspected menu, she seemed to become accustomed to the deadly diet and kept right on visiting. The father-in-law was submitted to much the same treatment, but the murderous scientist went even farther and induced him to spray his throat with a preparation containing diphtheria germs. Again there was nothing doing and the old man was finally disposed of by a crude, unscientific poison and smothering.

In the last decade, science has been exceedingly busy finding germs and identifying them. As these successive discoveries have been heralded to the public, the wonder has grown that we ever had any ancestors inasmuch as they lived in blissful ignorance amid a cloud of bacteria. Dr. Waite's murderous experiments have a real scientific value in proving that it isn't the omnipresence of disease germs that does the damage, but that safety lies in keeping the body in such a state of strong, healthy efficiency that it will be immune to germ invasions.

It is hopeless to try to dodge all the germs and persons who attempt it are not only putting themselves to unnecessary trouble, but also weakening their resistance by worrying. Keep fit and the chances are that the germs which light upon you will die of disappointment.—Editorial, Minneapolis (Minn.) Daily News.

Still, while the Democratic politicians are "thanking Gawd for Wilson who kept us out of war," we cannot help recalling that in 1898 when President McKinley was straining every effort to keep us out of war, these same politicians were abusing him as a cowsrd and a craven.

The man who says advertising is not read is probably the same one who makes it a habit to drop into the barber's shop so as to get a chance to see the paper.

We want everybody to vote at this election. It's your duty to vote. The public weal requires that you vote. Your own interests urge you to vote.

William A. Ewing and Miss Marguerite O'Neill Joined in Wedlock October 21.

"William A. Ewing, son of Professor and Mrs. J. T. Ewing of this city, was united in marriage last week Saturday at Bay City to Miss Marguerite O'Neill of Sault Ste. Marie.

"The wedding was a quiet affair, and only a very few friends of the couple were present when the ceremony was performed. They returned to Alma on Sunday evening and will make this city their home.

"The bride was a popular Sault Ste. Marie young lady and was a graduate of Alma college with the class of 1913. She is well and favorably known here through her four years spent in Alma, while a student at Alma college, and has a large circle of Alma friends.

"The groom is one of Alma's most popular young men, and was a former city editor of the Alma Record. Mr. Ewing also is a graduate of Alma college with the class of 1913, and since that time has been engaged in chautauqua work, the newspaper business and is now in the advertising and sales department of the Republic Motor Truck Company, Inc., of this city."

The above article was clipped from the Alma Record, a newspaper on which Mr. Ewing was formerly employed. The newly weds have the best wishes of a host of Charlevoix friends. Mr. Ewing will be remembered as having filled the responsible position as principal of the Charlevoix schools during the past two years.

BROKERAGE COMPANY PROVES A FRAUD

Women Throughout Country Stung for Many Dimes.

One of the gigantic frauds of the day has been unveiled by the government in the exposure of the National Brokerage exchange, operating from Minneapolis. The promoters of the scheme used the time worn "chain letter system" to catch the unsuspecting.

To every woman sending in ten cents in silver and writing to five other ladies urging them to join the chain, the "exchange" offered a new 1917 model silk petticoat.

After the postal authorities took charge of the hastily vacated offices one day's mail brought 2,500 dimes.

Many local ladies received letters and sent in dimes as well as writing to other friends of the city urging them to "snap up the bargain of a silk petticont for 10c."

TEN COUNTIES REPRESENTED

AT 32ND ANNUAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION

Address Given Were of Great Interest to Those in Attendance—Features of the Meeting.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the eleventh district held their 32nd annual convention in this city on Tuesday and Wednesday, October 17-18. Representatives from all parts of the district which includes ten counties were in attendance.

The beautifully printed programs included reports from superintendents, county presidents, local unions and general officers, as also the usual "greetings" in the form of cheery welcomes and response which were given the first evening by the chosen leaders. In behalf of the churches by Rev. Quinton Walker, public schools by W. E. Hampton, president of the board of education; Sunday school by Dr. A. M. Wilkinson, who enlivened his talk by singing a couple of stirring songs. Missionary societies by Mrs. C. E. Taggart, young peoples societies by Miss Florence Milner and in behalf of the local union by Mrs. H. P. Parmalee.

In response, Mrs. Etta B. Shaw, of Grand Rapids, national Evangelist, gave some pertinent words of cheer and encouragement. Mrs. Shaw travels from north to south and east to west holding large meetings in the interest of state wide prohibition in all our cities, both large and small. Her address here on the second evening was of intense interest, covering much ground and was highly appreciated as was evident from the hearty and frequent applause. The only regret was that more time was not given her. Michigan W. C. T. U. is highly favored by having as one of their very own this gifted woman.

A beautiful duet by Miss Elva Jeffery and Miss Audrey Correll was encored with loud applause. Campaign songs by the pupils of the third grade, public schools, in charge of Miss Correll, did honor to all concerned. After the songs little Master Bergeon mounted a chair and vigorously led in some very significant yells. Not least of the many enjoyable numbers was the duet by the Misses Hildegarde and Clara Wilkinson, "The Pure White Ribbon."

The reports of the general officers showed work up to date in the several lines. The presidents address was so highly appreciated that on motion it was ordered printed to be widely distributed.

The meetings were held in the Congregational church, which was beautifully decorated with mottos, campaign posters, banners and long hands of white entwined around the platform and pulpit, while cut flowers were evident in many places.

Mrs. Jennie Alcox, the enthusiastic leader of the great union, with her willing workers, arranged for the meeting not forgetting anything that would bring pleasure or comfort. Long may she be spared to lead "onward." A pleasing surprise came to the platform in the shape of an elegant dress pattern for the president, as also another planned by the president herself for the general officers, the two secretaries, the treasurer and the vice president at large, which included for each a sterling silver spoon marked most appropriately with cross and crown.

Another treat was that of the fine auto ride given the delegates around the city by M. B. Hooker. The ministers of the city were hearty in their support, giving any help required.

A special letter of sympathy was ordered sent to Mrs. M. M. Bailey, our cherished superintendent of medal contests, who was detained at home by the serious illness of her only daughter. Mrs. Richardson, of Norwood, was also remembered and a telegram sent to Mrs. A. Benjamin, of Grand Rapids, expressing loving remembrance.

The recitation, "The Man of the Hour," by Odillion Weed, was perfect and inspiring. "Preparedness," a paper on this popular question of today by Mrs. N. J. Stone, of Petoskey, was scholarly and covered much and was followed by open parliament.

A paper read by Mrs. Taggart on "How My Department Helps State Wide Prohibition," written by Mrs. Bailey, of Benzonia, was much appreciated. A table of literature free to all was well patronized and thus will messages be sent all over the district.

The election of officers resulted in choosing the same who have served during several years in the past, Mrs. P. J. Howard, president; Mrs. Jennie Alcox, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Hoyt, recording secretary; Mrs. Hattie Lockhoff, vice president at large.

The local union had arranged to have the meals served in the dining room of the church and truly the long tables were fairly loaded with good things each time.

A resolution of thanks to the Charlevoix union, who so graciously entertained the convention and to all who in any way helped to make the convention the great success it was, was most heartily adopted.

In the closing moments of the last evening the victory song by Dr. Frank Wilkinson received a hearty applause. The benediction was pronounced and thus closed one of the best district conventions ever held.

THE STATE GRANGE AND HOME RULE

FARMERS CANNOT BE DECEIVED AND EMPHATICALLY SHOW THAT FAKES WON'T GO.

AN UNEQUIVOCAL STATEMENT

Why Farmers Will Vote No On the Saloonkeeper's So Called Home Rule Amendment.

The following resolution was adopted unanimously by the Executive Committee of the Michigan State Grange at a meeting held at Lansing, September 6, 1916:

WHEREAS, The president of an organization favoring the adoption of the so-called "Home Rule" amendment, intended to destroy the present County Local Option system by providing a smaller unit for its application, has advertised himself as a "member of the State Grange" with the evident intention of carrying the inference that he represents the sentiment of the Michigan State Grange.

AND WHEREAS, The State Grange in all its annual sessions in recent years has by unanimous vote enthusiastically endorsed the County Local Option system and opposed the reduction of the unit to the township, village and city,

THEREFORE RESOLVED, by the Executive Committee of the State Grange, acting for and with the full authority of that body between its annual sessions, that the action of the said person is entirely out of harmony with the sentiment and intent of the State Grange and that until state-wide prohibition of the liquor traffic becomes an actual fact, we are unalterably opposed to any decrease in the unit of territory for local option below the county and call upon every member in our order and every lover of sobriety, good government and clean manhood to work earnestly and persistently from now until the polls close on the evening of November 7 against this misleading and pernicious measure and we urge every voter to vote "NO" on this so-called "Home Rule" amendment, which is but another attempt to destroy what we have already gained in the fight against the saloon.

Bridges In Korea.

Some idea of the delights of traveling in Korea is given by the following description by a traveler of the "bridges" in that country:

A first class bridge in Korea is simply an assortment of planks nailed together. These are scarce.

A second class bridge is a series of isolated stones, from one to another of which the visitor may jump.

A third class bridge, much the commonest variety, is invisible, its position being indicated by a couple of posts, one on each side of the river. They mean that you may safely wade across, as the water will probably not go much over your chest.

TURN OUT AND VOTE AGAINST THE "FAKE HOME RULE" PLAN

THE VOTERS OF MICHIGAN HAVE GIVEN US FORTY-FIVE DRY COUNTIES.

VOTE YES NOVEMBER SEVEN

Read the Amendment to the Constitution and Then Work for Its Passage.

"MAKE THE MAP ALL WHITE", says an official of the Michigan Anti-Saloon League in a recent address. "REAL HOME RULE is the rule of the PEOPLE in the interest of the HOME. REAL HOME RULE means abolition of every great social evil which attacks and corrupts the homes of the people. The mother of all social evils is THE SALOON.

"'FAKE HOME RULE' in Michigan this year is a plan aimed to confuse the voter and get him to endorse a small unit local option measure, whose adoption would mean retreat for the anti-saloon army. This second amendment put forth by the liquor forces is also cleverly phrased so as to wipe out all of the local option laws which now exist in the state, and under which more than half of the counties of Michigan have been voted dry.

"THE BEST ANSWER to the 'fake home rule' plan of the booze barons is the fact that Michigan voters have given us 45 dry counties. To make and keep the whole State dry you should vote 'NO' Nov. 7th, on the small unit local option amendment of the wets.

"IF YOU WANT REAL HOME RULE VOTE 'YES' NOVEMBER 7th, on the following amendment to the constitution:

"Amend article sixteen of the constitution by adding a new section thereto to stand as section eleven.

"ARTICLE XVI, Section 11. The manufacture, sale, keeping for sale, giving away, bartering or furnishing of any vinous, malt, brewed, fermented, spirituous or intoxicating liquors, except for medicinal, mechanical, chemical, scientific or sacramental purposes shall be after April 30, 1918, prohibited in the state forever. The Legislature shall by law provide regulations for the sale of such liquors for medicinal, mechanical, chemical, scientific and sacramental purposes."

YES (X) NO ( )

The statewide dry leaders are warning their followers to vote "NO" on the following constitutional amendment to Article VIII, Section 30, proposed by the saloon and brewery forces:

"Section 30. Every incorporated city, every incorporated village and every organized township (meaning thereby all that part of a township outside the limits of an incorporated city or village located partly or wholly therein) shall each have the right to determine by a majority vote of the electors thereof, whether or not there shall be prohibited therein the manufacture and sale of malt, brewed, fermented, vinous, distilled or intoxicating liquors.

"Appropriate legislation shall be enacted to enforce and make effective the provisions of this section and, until such legislation is enacted, existing local option and regulatory laws on this subject shall continue in force; but no existing law inconsistent with the provisions of this section shall continue in force after January 1, 1919."

WOMAN HELPS GREAT CAUSE

With Money Procured By Selling Eggs She Donates to Fight the Plague.

"Do not write anything back about this money but send me the calendar, because this is the money I have earned selling eggs. My husband does not know I gave this money."

This brief note on a post card enclosed with $3.00, explains how some of the women of Michigan are working to help the movement which will smash saloons. If ever a wife were justified in sending money to a cause without her husband's knowledge surely this is the cause now.

Who can measure the worlds of woe which suffering woman and children have endured because of the grip of the terrible drink evil upon the husband and father? Now is the time to marshal our forces in Michigan for the full annihilation of this, the greatest single evil in human society.

CHAPTER V.

Then I'll Come Back to You.

ON the drive home Wednesday Caleb rehearsed a half score of speeches with which he might apprise his sister Sarah of the step he had taken, but when the time came for him to employ one of them he forgot the entire lot and had to resort to a halting and stammered statement of the facts, which sounded more like a confession of guilt than anything else. It had grown colder with the storm, and directly after a hastily swallowed supper, with many indignant glances for her brother, Sarah had bundled the boy off upstairs to bed, for he had come in out of the rain as sleekly wet as a water rat and blue fingered and blue lipped from the cold. So it happened that they were all alone before the fireplace when Caleb made known his decision.

"I've never done much of anything for anybody but myself, you know, Sarah," Caleb hesitatingly tried to account for his conduct. "And this seems to me to be as big an opportunity as I'll ever have. You—you like the boy, don't you, so far as you have become acquainted with him?"

"Yes, I like him," she assented, after awhile.

"Of course it—it comes as a surprise to you," he murmured. "It is pretty sudden, but I don't think that either of us will ever regret it."

And then Sarah faced round toward her brother. Her eyes were unaccountably wet, but there was laughter on her lips.

"A surprise—a—a somewhat sudden!" she faltered. "Why, I knew you were going to do it that first day when you came sidling up to the veranda behind him. I was certain of it even then. And if you hadn't decided to—why, I'd made up my mind that I'd do it myself if you ever came back from that endless fishing trip!"

"I've been rummaging through some of the old chests upstairs," she added. "Today I explored for hours and found some of the things you used to wear which look as though they hadn't been worn at all. I laid some of them out for him to put on when he gets up in the morning. And, Cal, who'd ever believe now that a plump behemoth like you ever could have worn such—such dainty and cunning things!"

The inferred description should have prepared Caleb, but at the moment he failed to remeber that it was some forty years since the garb she mentioned had been in vogue. Instead, he blushed uncomfortably at the gurgle in her throat. And so the next morning, when a little figure in velvet jacket and pantaloons—velvet of the same jet hue in which Barbara Allison had first appeared to the boy a day or two before—stopped at the head of the long stairway the moment was robbed of not one whit of its sensationalism.

There was something in Sarah's fluttering delight over the boy's changed appearance that morning which awoke an almost hysterical impulse in her brother.

When Caleb came back an hour later, with Allison at his heels, he searched the house through without finding the boy. In his perplexity he appealed to Sarah, who followed him to the front door.

"Where's Stephen?" he asked.

Sarah nodded to Allison.

"Why, I waited a half hour, Cal," she said, "and then, when I thought you wouldn't be back for awhile, I sent him downtown—I sent him to the village"—

Caleb seemed fairly to shriek.

"You sent him down to the village?" he echoed. "Did he—did he change his clothes?"

"For some eggs," Sarah rounded out the sentence. "And of course he didn't." Suddenly her brother's face alarmed her. "Cal," she exclaimed, "I haven't done anything I shouldn't have done, have I?"

Caleb turned a wry face toward Allison.

"In—that—outfit!" he groaned. "Down to the village, and it's a lumber town! He's gone, and if he doesn't have to fight his way back then I"—

Sarah's alarm changed to fear instantly. She stepped out upon the porch.

They sat and waited, and in due course of time the boy returned. As he appeared at the gate Sarah, with a strange choking sound in her throat, half rose and then dropped weakly back into her chair. And even to Allison, who had fondly looked forward to the worst, the little suit with the pretty ruffed cuffs was an unbelievable wreck. The coat had been ripped from hem to collar and dangled loose upon either side as the boy advanced toward them, the knees of the trousers were split till the bare skin showed through beneath, and those portions of the fabric which were not incrusted with dirt were liberally o'erspread with egg.

After one stricken glance at the spectacle Sarah tottered to her feet and retreated none too steadily into the house.

"Just what does this mean?" Caleb faltered. "Where have you been?"

He hardly recognized the boy's voice.

"I been daown to the city," Steve slurred the words. "I been daown to git Miss Sarah a dozen eggs, and I run into trouble daown there a-gittin' 'em."

"You'd better go upstairs and get into your old clothes," Caleb advised him then. "And I'll get you something less—less dangerous to wear before night."

But the boy stood rigid still.

"Will you," he asked, "will you give me another quarter now?"

"A quarter," echoed Caleb slowly, even while he reached into his pocket and handed the coin to the boy. "Now, what do you— Here, where are you going now?"

"Why, I'm goin' back daown to the city," he grated out. "I'm goin' back after Miss Sarah's eggs!"

And he went, and when he returned the creases in the paper bag which held his purchase were as fresh as when it had left the grocer's counter.

"Well, I'm—I'm hanged!" Allison murmured, after the boy had entered the house. "I'm hanged! You'll have to bring that youngster over, Cal, and introduce him to the children."

Acting upon Dexter's suggestion, the man took Steve the very next day and presented him to the children who were guests in the big stucco and timber house: Little, shy, transparent skinned Mary Graves and Garret Devereau and Archibald Wickersham—the Right Honorable Archie. But from the very first Steve's lack of enthusiasm for their company impressed itself upon Caleb. As a matter of fact, the boy did cross over and join in their games the first day or two, but it was only after Caleb himself had suggested it. And more often than not he would be back again before an hour had passed, to sit silent and moody.

But it needed no word of Caleb's to keep Steve at home. Without some suggestion to urge him, the latter showed no inclination to leave his own yard, and yet he would sit, too, for hours upon the top step of the veranda, staring in the direction of the stucco lodge and listening to the voices behind the high hedge. More and more often Garry Devereau came over and joined him instead, and together the pair made almost daily trips down to the mills. A quick intimacy had grown up between the two boys, an intimacy which seemed all the stranger to Caleb because of the contrast between them.

From the beginning Steve had evinced an insatiable appetite for books; he started in to devour everything upon which he could lay his hands, and the Hunter library was lined with well stocked cases. But it was the history volumes that drew him most. With a fat tome upon his knees he would sit for hours in a corner upon the floor, his eyes glued to the pages. And one day, two weeks after the occurrence of the eggs, he came to Sarah with a shy question, a book in one hand. After she had caught the drift of his query Sarah took the volume and found that he had been reading of the fabulous deeds of King Arthur and his Knights of the Round Table.

Steve went back to his reading after she had finished, but ever and again that morning his eyes, blank with preoccupation, wandered from the type; ever and again his ears seemed to be straining to catch the echo of childish trebles from the yard beyond the hedge. And after dinner Caleb was astonished when the boy explained, a little awkwardly, that he was going over to Allison's grounds for awhile. Allison himself passed Steve in the hedge gap and, with a word of greeting, stopped to shake hands with him gravely. So it came about that they were sitting together, Dexter and Caleb, smoking in silence, when Barbara Allison's first scream came shrilling to their ears. They waited, staring at each other until the riotous clamor which rose set them to running across the lawn. But the scene which met Caleb's eyes when he burst through the shrubbery froze him into immobility.

O'Mara Mauled the Honorable Archibald Wickersham.

There was a seething pack of children around two writhing figures upon the ground; they were all shrieking in soprano panic—all save Garry Devereau. He, standing a little to one side, was smiling his queer, crooked, handsome smile, while Stephen O'Mara mauled the Honorable Archibald Wickersham with true riverman thoroughness, which meant the infliction of the greatest possible damage in the least possible time.

It grew very quiet when Caleb whirled the boy around and stood peering sternly down into his battle streaked features. Allison strode quietly up in that moment.

"Well?" Caleb didn't know just how to begin, but his voice was cold. "Well, young man, can you explain just what this means?"

"Nuthin'—unthin' much," Steve replied, "only we was goin' to play King Arthur and the Knights of the Round Table. He wanted to be her knight"—an uncomplimentary thumb indicated the Hon. Archie—"and—and so did I." This time his eyes went to Barbara, who was listening, her teeth sunk in her lip. "He wanted to be her knight, an'—an' he ain't got no call to be, because in case of trouble or anything he couldn't purtect her. He couldn't fight good enough to take good keer o' her, because I kin fight better. I—I just licked him to prove it."

"But in the days when knighthood was in flower, Steve," Caleb explained ponderously, "the—the fair ladies always chose their own knights, didn't they?"

And just then the little girl, her eyes twin shafts of searing scorn, curled her lips at him and fairly spat out the words in her shaking rage.

"You—you—my knight?" she half whispered. "You!" And she turned her back and went, solicitously, toward Archie and his rumpled clothes.

Even Allison stopped smiling, even Devereau forgot his curious amusement at the livid change which came over Steve's face with that answer which she flung at him. The boy fell away a step before her fierce little visage; he crooked one arm over the cheek where her fists had beaten the skin pink a moment before. And then her meaning struck him like a blow between the eyes.

"I ain't good enough to be your knight, am I?" he accused her in a hushed and vibrant voice. "I—I don't know enough, nor I can't talk good enough fo be your knight. I ain't good enough fer you. But I'm a-goin' to be—do you hear? I'm a-goin' to be. An' when I am—when I am—then I'll come back to you!"

This time, rigid as a lance, he disappeared from sight. Caleb stood staring at the ground. Allison stood and stared at the horizon.

Steve did not come downstairs for supper that night, and when he failed to appear at the breakfast hour both Caleb and Sarah mounted to his room, fear in their hearts. The bed had not been slept in. The sheets were not even disarranged, but there was a scrap of paper pinned to one pillow slip. It wasn't written in "book language," that short message, for it was not his brain, but his heart which had phrased it:

"Why, Cal—why, Cal, he's—he's gone!" she quavered.

I'm a-comin' back—I'm comin' back to you some day when they won't be no need fer you to be ashamed fer me. I'm takin' my new clothes with me because I knowed you would a-wanted me to—and the shoes too. I'm askin' you to take keer of ole Samanthy till I come for her—and Miss Sarah ain't got no call to worry, for I could always take keer o' myself.

It was signed "Stephen O'Mara."

Sarah's face went white when she had read it through. Her knees weakened under her, and she had to sit down.

"Why, Cal—why, Cal, he's—he's gone!" she quavered.

And Caleb nodded down into her stricken face.

"Yes, he—he's gone!" he breathed.

Sarah swallowed hard. Then two bright tears crept out from under her eyelids and went coursing down her cheeks. She rose and groped her way to her own room.

Caleb found Barbara Allison waiting in the living room when he, still numb from the shock, went back downstairs.

VOTE MICHIGAN DRY NOV. 7
"YES" FOR PROHIBITION
"NO" ON HOME RULE

Vote for a Square Deal and Defeat "Home Rule"

VOTE MICHIGAN DRY NOV. 7
"YES" FOR PROHIBITION
"NO" ON HOME RULE

On Nov. 7 every voter will receive ballots for four Constitutional Amendments. Two of these relate to the liquor traffic and two do not. Your special attention is called to the two amendments relating to the liquor traffic.

Every voter must vote twice on the liquor traffic. Every enemy of the saloon must vote "YES" on the Dry State-wide Amendment to Article XVI, Section 11, for prohibition. Every voter, wet or dry, who believes in the square deal, will vote "NO" on the "wet" or so-called "Home Rule" Amendment to Article VIII, Section 30.

What is the so-called "home rule" amendment? It is a plan to change the Michigan Local Option Law so that the voting unit will be the city, village or township instead of the county, as at present. It is distinctly a wet measure, advocated by the Michigan Home Rule League, which is the anti-prohibition organization of the Michigan saloons who are backed by the brewers and distillers in many other states than Michigan.

Who wants the so-called "home rule" amendment? The saloon crowd, brewers and distillers. Who are fighting the "home rule" amendment? The United Dry Federation of Michigan, including the Michigan Anti-Saloon League, Michigan Grange, Michigan Gleaners, Michigan State Sunday School Association, The Trade Union Dry League, W. C. T. U., and other great organizations, both Catholic and Protestant.

What the "wets" want in Michigan is to defeat state-wide prohibition and nullify county local option—and to do this they hope to deceive enough dry voters so as to get a majority, November 7.

If the state-wide dry amendment is defeated and the wet "home rule" amendment is adopted, the county local option law of Michigan will be destroyed and the state will be as wet legally as it was before Van Buren County went dry in 1890.

She came up to him and stood a moment, twining the fingers of one hand within those of the other.

"I want to see Stephen, please, Uncle Cal," she faltered.

Caleb drew a deep and unsteady breath.

"Steve isn't here, Barbara," he said as gently as he could.

The child didn't understand.

"Father sent me over to apologize," she explained slowly. "I'm to tell him that I'm sorry. But I—I want to tell him, too, that if I couldn't have him for my knight I—I wouldn't ever have any knight at all!"

Caleb felt a tightening at his throat which made speech difficult.

"But Steve has gone away," he managed to gulp.

A shadow came into the dark eyes lifted to his.

"He'll be back for breakfast, won't he?" she asked hopefully.

"I'm afraid not, Barbara. I'm afraid now that he may never come back—again."

She didn't understand what he meant at first, so Caleb tried to explain. But when his voice broke and trailed off into a husky whisper there was no further need of explanation. She ran then and threw herself in a passion of tears upon a window seat in the corner. Caleb found his chair. And after a time he felt a small hand touch his sleeve; he felt a wet cheek pressed tight to his own.

"Oh, don't you feel so badly, too, Uncle Cal," Barbara sobbed. "Please, please! Because he is coming back! He told me he would; he told me he would himself!"

VAN PELT'S TOURING DAIRY

Thursday, September 28, 1916.

This surely is another red letter day. Redder than the reddest red of any of the red days that you have read about. We left Lake George at eight a. m., drove to Bolton Landing (ten miles) on the west side of the lake. It was a glorious morning, just crisp enough to make it snappy and on our way back we made several stops.

Webster hasn't words large enough to describe the beauty of Lake George and its little wooded islands. From Lake George we drove to Elizabethtown, where we stopped at the Deer Head Inn for dinner, passing through Warrensburg and Chestertown on the way. After dinner we drove to Lake Placid where we are nicely ensconced. (This is a good word—I seldom use it because I don't really know what it means.)

Now, regarding the beauty of this 130 mile drive today. In order to do it justice I would have to be in a licensed town, or in an unlicensed one where ice houses are annexed to the back part of supposedly respectable offices and business houses. As it is I can only say—no frost here as yet, but the trees are putting on their autumn colorings, and they are beginning to be gorgeous.

When the pioneers cut the forests they either left those that were on the line by the side of the road or they set out others—maples, almost exclusively, with the result that it is simply beautiful. We have been in and among the mountains all day and they are no little ones either, but great big ones, two thousand to four thousand feet high and all covered with second growth. Its no good for lumber, but all good for pulp.

The soil is all poor—as Harry Nichols would say, not worth a d—n and—how the people live—I give it up. No, I don't either, its from tourists. Every four miles there is a hotel and they are all well patronized. They, like ourselves, have had the largest season they ever had—every mile of our 130 today has been perfect. We could have driven 50 miles an hour over any of it, but there are hundreds of sharp curves and they are dangerous too. Not a rut did I see today. Like with us, there are many small lakes. The summer season is closed and so are the largest hotels, but there were about 50 cars where we stopped for dinner and from a dozen states.

Eugene Van Pelt just came in and asked if I mentioned the heighth of White Face mountain. It is 4,832 feet. How's that for high. And its just back of our hotel. This hotel, the Stevens House, has a 1,200 foot piazza, 13 feet wide, is located between two lakes and is 2,063 feet high—that is the ground on which it stands. There are also golf links, which, on account of the irregular ups and downs are quite sporty. I saw two big black bears from the hotel, but they were chained. They couldn't bite me and I hope this letter won't hurt you.

VAN PELT.

SCHOOL COMMISSIONER'S NOTES

First round of visits completed in Marion township. Monday and Tuesday.

Marion Center, which is Marion No. 9, has all new steel-framed adjustable seats. This district and Horton Bay have the best seating conditions in the county, city schools not excepted.

Marion township teachers' meeting was held at Marion Center, Tuesday afternoon. Every teacher was present and a lively meeting ensued. It was an inspiration to the less fortunate teachers to look at the new seats and see what can be done by progressive district fathers.

Hurrah for Phelps, the sixth standard school in Charlevoix county. The first standard school in Marion township. Say! You ought to have been there to hear those children shout for joy!

Clarion schools ordered closed because of two diphtherin cases in town.

East Chandler school has been carefully fumigated and opens Monday, the 30th.

Boyne Falls schools have had the quarantine lifted. Let us hope this is the end of misfortune to our schools and to our boys and girls.

Hart Lake Hallowe'en social Friday the 27th was well attended. A good time reported by all. The commissioner was glad she was there.

The second visit made to Boyne Valley No. 6.

The commissioner has postponed her trip to Grand Rapids three days but will attend all of the general discussions at the commissioners and superintendents' meetings during the last of the week. No notes therefore next week.

SPARE THE OMELET!

How to Test Eggs in an Easy, Practical Way.

For the benefit of the many women who do not know the varions means of testing home foods the following hints nra given:

A simple test for the freshness of eggs depends upon their weight. An egg quickly loses water by evaporation through its shell and weighs less as it grows older. Place the eggs in a solution made of two ounces of salt to one pint of water. A fresh egg sinks. An egg a few days old haa a tendeacy to risa a little in the liquid, while a stale egg floats on the top.

The light test is a very effective one. Place an opaque screen over a strong light, leaving an aperture about the size of an egg. Place the egg between the eye and light, close against the opening. A fresh egg appears clear, almost translucent, and at the large end, between the lining and the cell, a small transparent air chamber can be seen. Dark spots indicate staleness. A stale or rotten egg looks darker than a fresh one. If an egg is broken and the white and yolk are found to have run together it is almost enough proof that the egg is not fresh.

How to Crack Nuts For Fudge and Cake.

Almost all housewives know how very hard it is to crack pecan nuts. Pour boiling water over the nuts and allow them to stand tightly covered for five or six hours. The nut meats may then be extracted easily without a trace of the bitter lining of the nut. Use nut crackers and crack lightly all around the nuts. The work is quickly done and is not at all like the old tedious process of picking out the meats from the dry nuts. The meats nearly always come out whole.

How to Remove Iron Rust From Cottons and Linens.

Buy five cents' worth of oxalic acid crystals (poison), put into a bottle, fill up with water and shake. On a sunny day take clothes with iron rust on outdoors, wet with oxalic acid solution and hold in sun until stain disappears. If it does not go quickly wet again and rub between hands. Then be very sure to rinse thoroughly or the acid will eat the cloth.

How to Hang Curtains So That They Hang Well.

Curtains will hang straight if a small lead weight is sewed in each end of the lower hem. In the case of thin curtains the weights will also prevent them from blowing. They will hang as they should, following the line of the woodwork. For silk curtains get a weighted braid, which comes for dress skirts, and sew it in the hem.

AFFLICTED WITH PECULIAR MALADY

CHARLEVOIX RESIDENT NOW IN REYCRAFT HOSPITAL

Disease Forces Physicians to Amputate the Right Leg of Mrs. Bernoy Harrington.

Mrs. Barney Harrington, of this city, lies at the Reycraft hospital in Petoskay, in a critical condition, the victim of a peculiar malady. Only three cases of this affliction known as phlebetis, or inflammation of the veins, has ever been received at the hospital and it is considered a rare, and not very well understood disease by the medical profession.

Mrs. Harrington has been ill for several weeks, but the nature of the trouble was not discovered until she was taken to the Saville sanitarium in Petoskey week before last to undergo treatment for what was supposed to be rheumatism. When the phlebetis diagnosis of Dr. Seville had been verified by Dr. John Reycraft, she was immediately removed to the Reycraft hospital, where on Saturday of last week, it was found necessary, owing to the rapid development of the disease, to amputate her right leg below the knee. The trouble was further complicated by the presence of gangrene. She is now in a very serious condition and but slight hopes are entertained for her recovery.

CONGRESSMAN FALCONER GAVE ROUSING SPEECH

Predicts Michigan Will Go Dry—Scores Wilson Policies.

Congressman Faleoner, of the state of Washington, who spoke at the Republican rally in this city Monday night, says that indications convince him that Michigan will go dry by a large majority this month. He spoke at length on Wilson's Mexican policy and declared it a failure.

The west, according to Mr. Faleoner, has not enjoyed the wave of European war order prosperity which has been speeding up the wheels of business in the eastern states and for that reason the usual depression contingent upon a Democratic regime has been more keenly felt there than in other sections of the country.

GROWING YOUNG STOCK.

Management of Chickens After They Are Placed on Range.

(Prepared by New Jersey State Agricultural college.)

After the chicks are weaned and placed on the range the aim should be to induce a continuous growth throughout the summer. If checks or setbacks, due to improper feeding or care, are avoided they will mature more quickly and more uniformly.

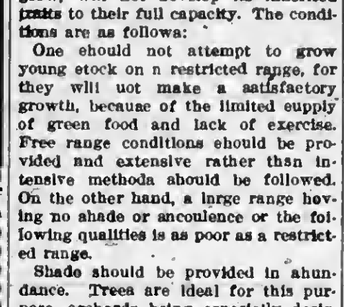
Environment plays an important part, as the best bred chick possessing all other desirable characteristics, if not given ideal conditions in which to grow, will not develop its inherited traits to their full capacity. The conditions are as follows:

One should not attempt to grow young stock on a restricted range, for they will not make a satisfactory growth, because of the limited supply of green food and lack of exercise. Free range conditions should be provided and extensive rather than intensive methods should be followed. On the other hand, a large range having no shade or succulence or the following qualities is as poor as a restricted range.

Shade should be provided in abundance. Trees are ideal for this purpose, orchards being especially desirable. If trees are not available corn or sunflower seeds can be planted, and in the absence of either of these artificial shelters of burlap over wooden frames should be provided.

A large supply of green succulent food material is very necessary. If free range conditions are provided this will be found in abundance. Where it is necessary to grow a large number of chicks on a limited area the plot of land should be divided into two parts, colony houses being placed approximately through the center of the field and a portable fence placed on one side of the house and later moved to the other side. This will permit rotating the two areas and growing desirable crops to supply succulence. Peas and oats can be sown early in the spring, followed by rape and later by buckwheat. In the fall wheat, rye, vetch and clover, any or all can be sown to provide a winter cover crop and furnish early greens for the following spring.

The chicks should be given an abundance of house room, since crowding



In warm weather fowls need to be provided with an abundance of fresh, cool water. The drinking vessels should preferably be made of porous earthenware and so constructed as to prevent the fouling of the water by the birds. The water vessels are of much the same type and are excellent for the intended purpose. They should be placed in the shade and frequently filled with fresh water.

stunts their growth and results in many weaklings. A colony house 8 by 10 feet will house from 100 to 150 chicks at five weeks of age, and after the male birds are separated at about ten weeks it will easily accommodate the forty or fifty remaining pullets throughout the balance of the season. In managing the growing stock personal attention should always be given to their wants, especially when young. Considerable attention is required in seeing that all are brought in quickly from sudden showers and that they find their proper quarters at night and are protected from rats and other enemies. It must be remembered that these growing pullets are the machines which during the next year are to consume the raw produce, food, and in return to give the finished product, eggs. If the machine represents a high degree of perfection it can be expected to utilize the food material to better advantage. Perfection can be attained only by providing free range and fresh air.

Treatment For Scaly Leg.

The legs of each fowl should be carefully examined to note their condition. If there is the least suspicion of scales on the legs they should be carefully washed with hot water and soap so as to clean out all the dirt. Then wipe dry and anoint with carbolated vaseline or a mixture of equal parts of lard and kerosene. One or two applications are generally all that is necessary, but if not attended to a single case of scaly legs will eventually affect the entire flock.

Dry Food For Chicks.

Chicks grow better and remain healthier when the bulk of their food is fed in dry form. Dry chick food—namely, mixed grains finely ground to about the size of wheat screenings or millet—when fed in the litter compels the chicks to hustle and scratch for their food and is ideal for developing strong, sturdy constitutions and digestive systems.

BAND WILL HOLD SOCIAL AND CONCERT

Regular Officers Elected at Meeting Last Monday Evening.

The Ellsworth citizens band held their regular semi-annual election of officers last Monday evening and the following were named: Director, F. O. Gillett; manager, L. K. Clark; secretary treasurer, H. Feiner. L. VanSkiver was elected president of the band as he is the board of trade president and band property would be in his charge.

The band is practicing new music and the members are showing renewed interest. They do not claim to be the best band in northern Michigan but they are as good as many bands and better than some. They will meet twice each week this winter on Monday and Thursday evenings.

On Friday evening, November 7th, a shadow social and band concert is planned and a large crowd is expected as the people always turn out well to efforts of this kind.

THE PERIL OF THE DRY COUNTY--HOME RULE IS RUM RULE

"VOTE NO" NOVEMBER 7 AND THEREBY MAKE THE STATE OF MICHIGAN DRY.

DEFEAT "HOME RULE" IDEA

The Purpose of the Michigan Home Rule League is to Defeat Prohibition.

"Vote Yes on the dry statewide amendment, and be sure to VOTE NO on the wet so-called home rule amendment." This is the word which from now till November 7 will go out from the state headquarters of the Michigan Dry Campaign committee at Lansing. The committee has issued the following official statement:

An organization of liquor dealers and their friends, who call themselves the "Michigan Home Rule League," is trying to fill the Michigan political air with the dust of misrepresentation.

This league, however, says in one of its leaflets, "The purpose of the Michigan Home Rule League is to defeat statewide prohibition." Many of the men who are announced as officers have been or are now connected, directly or indirectly, with the liquor business.

The "home rule" amendment to the constitution, providing for local option by cities, villages, or townships, is NOT A DRY MEASURE and should be ardently fought by every friend of the anti-saloon movement. If Michigan goes dry the small unit amendment will be utterly useless. MAKE MICHIGAN DRY.

This amendment is thrown into the statewide campaign only to confuse the issue and to give wets in dry counties something to rouse their flatless interest on the prohibition side. The fact that it is backed up by the liquor forces is sufficient to show its true meaning.

The small unit measure is always proposed by the minority party. The anti-saloon forces now have the upper hand in Michigan. Let them turn out and defeat this "home rule" idea. Let nobody be fooled into believing is nr working for this amendment.

"Taxation without representation" is the unpardonable crime committed by this proposition. If Jackson county went dry while the city of Jackson remained wet, the county element which opposed saloons would be heavily taxed to pay the public costs which saloons always impose upon the people. Every arrest for drunkenness, with the subsequent expenses of trial and imprisonment; every crime due to liquor, from petty larceny to murder, besides the vast array of expenses for poverty, insanity and disease, most of them traceable to alcoholism, would have to be borne by the entire county.

Today Michigan's forty-five dry counties must bear the expense of state institutions, the majority of whose inmates would not be a burden on the state if Michigan had not licensed saloons. Thus the small unit method always saddles a burden of "taxation without representation" upon the opponents of the saloon.

"The Peril of the Dry County—Home Rule is Rum Rule,' might be the true name of the small unit amendment. Unless it i defeated, every dry county in Michigan will ha in danger of a new fight to bring back saloons in townships and precincts. HENCE EVERY DRY COUNTY SHOULD ROUSE ITSELF TO THE ISSUE AND BACK THE STATE - WIDE MOVEMENT TO THE LAST INTRENCHMENT.

If it is adopted, the "fake home rule" amendment will abolish all present dry, local option laws and make the whole state again wet.

The President himself has tried to appropriate for his own advantage the sentiment of "American first." The Democrats have tried to make his support an act of piety, by adopting "Thank God for Wilson," as a slogan. Mr. Hughes, with rare courage, frankness and penetration, is exposing the flimsy foundation for the claims of Wilsonian infallibility. He is laying bare a record of extravagance, partisanship, sectionalism, incompetence, wrongheadedness, vacillation and insincerity which destroys the attempt to make a boss out of the President. The Democrats must come out of their ecstatic trance and defend their stewardship. The President is to be put on the stump. We are to hear something beside Delphic prose poems.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Mr. Wilson now virtually admits that all his own ideas were wrong four years ago. He has changed his mind on every public question. On some of them he has changed twice or even three times. Even if his friends could satisfy the public at this time he is exactly right, what assurance could be given that he would be right a year hence?

A. E. PICKARD, DIED TUESDAY

HAD BEEN ILL FOR A NUMBER OF WEEKS

Located in Ellsworth in 1894—Leaves Wife, Two Daughters and Host of Friends.

Albert E. Pickard, of Ellsworth, died at his home last Tuesday, after an illness of many weeks duration.

Mr. Pickard was born in Northport, October 1, 1858, 58 years ago. Shortly after his birth his family moved to Leland where deceased lived for 21 years and here he commenced teaching school at the age of 19. In 1879 he went to work for the East Jordan Lumber Co., at East Jordan. At the age of 24 he went into business for himself in East Jordan and shortly afterwards, in 1883, married Miss Emily Brinton, of Milwaukee. In 1894 Mr. Pickard moved to Ellsworth and went to work for the Ellsworth Lumber company. In 1897 he and his family went to Milwaukee, where he ran a store for 11 years. He returned to Ellsworth in 1908 and was made postmaster in March, 1910. He held this position continuously until his resignation, the 30th of September last, caused by his failing health.

The deceased leaves his wife and two daughters, Mrs. Mabel Estes, of Milwaukee, and Mrs. Beulah Emery, of Traverse City. His death, while not unlooked for, was a shock to the entire community, as during his residence here he had made many intimate friends.

"CROSSING THE BAR"

What the Drink Traffic Costs the American Consumers.

The retail cost of alcoholic liquors consumed by the people of the United States during 1915 has just been estimated by Mr. William P. F. Ferguson, the statistician, at $2,151,201,755. Mr. Ferguson's estimate in 1914 was $2,436,919,537.

If these figures are correct, the drink bill was $285, 717, 772 less in 1915 than in 1914, which does not accord with the theory that consumption is unaffected by prohibition.

Mr. Ferguson arrives at his figures by allowing $6.25 a gallon for domestic spirits, $8.00 for imported spirits, $2.00 for domestic wines, $4.00 for imported wines, $0.64½ for domestic beer, and $1.00 for imported beer.

The totals are $875,409,846 for spirits, $76,776,256 for wine; and $1,198,015,563 for beer.

The total expenditure for alcoholic liquors for the past seven years is estimated at $16,105,271,079. The receipts from internal revenue (1909-15) and duties (1908-14) for the past seven years amount to $1,642,468,428, leaving a net fiscal lose by reason of the internal revenue system for seven years of $14,462,807,651.

BREWERIES NOW BUSINESS HOUSES

Prohibition Does Not Confiscate Property, But Merely Forbids Its Misuse.

The Raymann brewery of Wheeling, W. Va., is now the P. O. Raymann Company, engaged in meat packing. The Uneeda brewery, of West Virginia, is now a milk and produce company. The Benwood brewery, of West Virginia, is now a chemical and soap plant. The Huntington brewery, of West Virginia, is now a meat packing plant. The Cedar Rapids brewery, of Iowa, is now an ice factory. The Iowa City brewery, of Iowa, is now a cream and produce company. The Star Brewery Company, of Washington, Pa., is now the Capital Paint, Oil and Varnish Company. The North Yakima Brewing Company, of the state of Washington, is now a fruit by-product company. The Salem, Ore., brewary is now making Loganberry juice. The Coors brewery, of Colorado, is now making a fine grade of pottery.—Indiana Issue.

The "point" is a place which a great many people claim to see, but very few care to get to. They will travel all around it, but to go right through to it, to make an attempt to arrive at it, is quite beyond them.

The singular thing about this is that everybody is urging them on to do it.

"If you will only get to the point," says the world, "it will be an immense help." Then all the psychologists, sociologists, theologians, orators and humorists declare they are going to—immediately.

The point laughs at them all.

"I'm safe!" says the point. "You'll never get me!"—Life.

A Cub.

Infant lions and bears are now generally spoken of as "cubs," but in former times the word "whelps" would have been used. Every edition of the English Bible from Wycliffe's time to 1011 gives "whelp" for the young of the lion or bear. A "cub" meant originally in English only a young fox. But by Shakespeare's time it was possible to talk of the "young suckling cubs" of a she bear, and Waller even applied "cub" to a young whale, now known as a "calf." The origin of "cub" is not really known, though the conjecture connecting it with the old Irish "cub," a dog, would make it akin to the Latin "canis" and English "hound."—Exchange.

SOME STARTLING FACTS ARE SHOWN

MORE THAN HALF THE POOR IN THE INFIRMARIES WERE LED IN BY THE BOOZE ROUTE.

EVIL WORK IS HUMILLIATING

Official Statements Should Be Read By Voters Who Pay Taxes And Would Remove the Cause.

County poor houses of Michigan, now known as infirmaries, furnish universal evidence that liquor is responsible for more than half of poverty.

Statistical tabulations showing the effect of the license and no-license systems in individual counties of Michigan are of little value as evidence. Many inmates of infirmaries are permanent occupants, whose entry or exit bears no direct relation to social conditions. A lapse of years, possibly of a whole generation, would be necessary to produce any radical change in pauperism as a class following the abolition of saloons.

Two facts stand out: One is that the authorities and citizens in dry counties are unanimous in their opinion that from the standpoint of the county poor the dry regime is far superior. The other fact is that many counties report officially that about three-fourths of the poverty which requires county aid to individual or family, is due to the use of alcoholic beverages.

Official statements written by superintendents of the poor include the following:

"This county is in the dry column, and we find that while the cost of everything is much higher, the supervisors are not called upon to furnish us more money now than they did while the county was wet."—C. C. Hellenbeck, Eaton county.

"We are pleased to inform you that there are so few cases in this county which are receiving relief that have been caused by alcoholic beverages. We have a clear slate, are now dry and expect to remain so."—O. O. Frick, Oscode county.

"Midland county has been dry eight years and people like it. Two old timers are all we have left in the county home whose condition is due to drink." — K. McKay, Midland county.

Confidential statements to the same effect, are as follows: "Drink is the almost universal cause of poverty while for temporary assistance it is probably the main factor in at least one half the cases. In my best judgment about 50 per cent of poverty in this county can be attributed to the use of drink if not more. In fact, nearly all the crime we have can be laid to the same cause."

"I am quite sure that three-fourths at least are caused by the liquor traffic."

Following are a few more definite statements:

Alger County: "About 75%."

Genessee County: "About 70% from liquor directly or indirectly."

Huron County: "Most of the inmates of the county farm here have come to the institution because of intemperance and the use of liquor."

Mason county: "35% directly and 20% indirectly, or 55% of all poverty in our county is caused by alcoholic drink."

Iron County: "Ten years as poor commissioner leads me to say that fully 95% of male inmates at our county farm have come here either directly or indirectly because of liquor."

Kent County: "Of 500 families helped during the year ending March 1, 1916, liquor was the direct cause of poverty in twenty-five families and an indirect cause of fifty-three families Of 103 persons in Kent County Detention Hospital last year, at least one half were caused by intemperance. In Kent County Home were 136 persons, of whom 85% can easily be traced to intemperance as a direct cause."—L. De Payter.

"To the best of my judgment, I would say that 80% of the poverty is caused by alcoholism. It would be a number of years after its passage before we could get the full benefit of state wide prohibition. The effects of the past years would stay with us until the rising generation took its place."—V. H. Billings.

Montcrency County: "Four of the six men in our poor house were forced to come here on account of drink."

Oakland County: "70% or more of the cases here are due to drink. We are going through the second dry time and we find it helps very much. I hope for state-wide prohibition."

HUGHES PITILESS ON MEXICAN DISGRACE

In His Mind and on His Tongue More Than Any Other Single Problem With Which Mr. Wilson Has Paltered.

CRAZY CHAPTER OF BLUNDERS

No One Can Hear Him Speak Without Seeing the Reality of His Indignation Over the Heartless Policy of the Democratic Administration Toward American Men, Women and Children, American Citizens, Soldiers and Sailors Along and Across the Rio Grande.

Soon after Mr. Hughes was nominated a friend said to him: "Governor, if the American people forget the Mexican disgrace they do not deserve to have you for President." Quick as a flash he replied: "The candidate who dodges the Mexican disgrace does not deserve to be President." He did not pass around his address of acceptance for compliment or criticism in advance of its delivery but the amount of space he devoted to the Mexican disgrace—"that confused chapter of blunders"—surprised no one who had talked with him since his nomination. It has been in his mind and on his mind more than any other single problem with which Mr. Wilson has paltered. To talk with him is to see at once the reality of his indignation over the heartless manner in which American men, women and children, American citizens, soldiers and sailors have been abandoned by the Administration along and across the Rio Grande, the victims of Mexican armed forces, outfitted with American ammunition and American rifles, Mexicans whom Mr. Wilson has coddled one day as patriots only to chase the next as bandits.

It is apparently the belief of Mr. Wilson that the people of the United States are not interested in Mexico. His defenders have declared that it was on "old story and out of date." Mr. Hughes has a better opinion of his fellow countrymen. He has proved himself a better judge of their feelings. He has made "the Mexican disgrace" a foremost issue of his campaign. He has assailed the record of the Administration in that respect in almost every speech he has made. He has never failed to strike a responsive chord in the hearts of his audience, whether speaking in Carnegie Hall, New York, from the platform of his train at Grand Forks, North Dakota, to a vast audience at Portland, at the Exposition at San Diego or in the prairie states of the Middle West. He has refuted the slander, sometimes heard in the effete East, that the people of the great West do not care what happens to their fellow citizens in Mexico or to the flag beyond the border. No man born in the West has a firmer faith in the fundamental patriotism and "dominant Americanism" of the people of that section than Mr. Hughes. He holds them responsible in large measure for the encouragement and support he received while Governor of New York in his war upon political graft and political bossism. He thinks they had much to do with conscripting him as the champion of nationalism in the current campaign. He showed his confidence in their practical idealism when he made "the Mexican disgrace" an uppermost issue of his campaign. He has been vindicated by the response his arraignment of the Administration on this score has everywhere evoked. From Maine to California "the Mexican disgrace" is a sore subject with red-blooded Americans today. But nowhere between the oceans are the outrages inflicted in Mexico upon American honor, life and property more keenly resented than around the fireSides of the great West. Mr. Hughes is no stranger to the West. His straightforward talk on Mexico proves it.

HUGHES OR WILSON? ROOSEVELT'S ANSWER

"Against Mr. Wilson's combination of grace in elocution with futility in action; against his record of words unbacked by deeds or betrayed by deeds, we see Mr. Hughes' rugged and uncompromising straightforwardness of character and action in every office he has held. We put the man who thinks and speaks directly, and whose words have always been made good, against the man whose adroit and facile elocution is used to conceal his plans or his want of plans. The next four years may well be years of tremendous national strain. Which of the two men do you, the American people, wish at the helm during these four years; the man who has been actually tried and found wanting, or the man whose whole career in public office is a guarantee of his power and good faith? But one answer is possible; and it must be given by the American people through the election of Charles Evans Hughes as President of the United States."—Roosevelt in Maine Speech.

SAFETY FIRST

Ex-Gov. Osborne was right when he called the liquor business a Social Saprophyte. Our remedy must be Radium not Rosewater, to cure this physical leprosy, moral meningitis, mental hydrophohia, and criminal civic excrescence, all in one; conceived in sin, shapen in iniquity, born in hastardy, nurtured upon impurity, wedded to harlotry, and mother of anarchy.

Theodore Roosevelt says it is a business that tends to lawlessness on the part of the one who conducts it, and to criminality on the part of those who patronize it. This is evident from the lies that have been told to holster it up. Let us look at the facts as taken from the government reports in regard to our neighboring state, Kansas:

	Michigan	Kansas
Total wealth	$2,765,439,636.	$2,884,624,540.
Population	2,810,173.	1,690,949.
Total wealth per capita	891.	1,703.
State tax rate per $1,000	3.40	1.20
Paupers per 100,000 pop.	105.7	43.5
Insane per 100,000 pop.	238.4	162.5
Percent of children in school	71.3	79.3
Blind Pigs (including drug stores)	3,956.	384.

The amount of money spent in Kansas during the year 1915 for drink per capita was $1.20. In Michigan during the same period the amount per capita was $30.00. Kansas has had Prohibition for 35 years. Let us sum up the results Speaking of wealth, Kansas has about two times the per capita wealth that Michigan has. Michigan's tax rate is almost three times that of Kansas. Michigan has almost two and one-half times as many paupers and twice as many insane as Kansas. Michigan has TEN TIMES as many Blind Pigs as Prohibition Kansas. If you want peace, progress and prosperity vote Michigan dry.

To vote Michigan dry, Vote YES on Article XVI providing for State-wide Prohibition, and vote NO on Article VIII which destroys county local option. VOTE ON BOTH AMENDMENTS.

HOW TO SELECT EXHIBITION CORN

FOR CORN CONTEST AT IRONTON GRANGE HALL

A Few Rules for Selecting Good Ears —Potatoes Should Be Uniform Size.

For the benefit of those who are planaing to enter corn in the big corn contest at Ironton Grange hall, November 17, we give the following rules for selecting good ears for exbibition or coatest purposes:

1. Start picking out the best ears of corn as fast as it is busked. Dry this corn thoroughly by aay of the common methods. In the process of drying, tbe kernels dry first and become loose on the cob. Ia mature corn, however, the kernels will again be pulled tightly together by the shrinking of the cob as it dries.

2. Decide on one ear wbicb you think possesses the proper size, shape, color and otber characteristics of the variety. Then match this type ear as closely as possible with nine otbers for your entry. Lack of uniformity in any respect should be avoided.

3. Select ears on which the rows are nearly straight and unbrokea from butt to tip.

4. Try to find ears with well covered butts and tips.

5. Avoid immature ears. Immaturity is shown by dull color and loose kernels. Small, well matured ears are better for contest purposes than larger but immature ears.

6. Avoid ears which show such defects as odd kernels, lost kernels, diseased kernels, irregular rows, flattened tips, bulging butts, or conspicuous signs of mixture.

Perfect ears will not be found. When your corn is well dried select those ears which most nearly approximate perfection. In all cases it is desired that the contestant give the variety name and tbo dates of planting and cuttlag.

In the potato contest, pick out only tubers of marketable size, uniform in size and ahape, true to type and free from disease or mechanical injuries. One half bushel entries are deaired.

YOUNG PEOPLE HAPPILY WED

CONTRACTING PARTIES ARE BOTH WELL KNOWN HERE

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Shapton, of Barnard, at high noon on Wednesday, when their daughter, Gertrude, was united in marriage to Mr. George Block, also of Barnard.

The young couple took their places under a beautifully decorated arch of smilax and chrysanthemums to the strains of the wedding march, played by Mrs. Earl Shapton, and here the Rev. Quinton Walker, of Charlevoix, pronounced the words which made them man and wife, using the beautiful and impressive ring ceremony.

Little Lee Shapton, brother of the bride, acted as ring bearer. The ceremony was witnessed by only the immediate families of the contracting parties.

After partaking of a dainty wedding lunch, the happy couple left for Muskegon, where they expect to remain for the winter.

Both the young people are very well and favorable known in both Barnard and Charlevoix, where they have filled large and useful places in both church and society. A host of friends join in wishing them a long, happy and prosperous life.

OLO TIME REVIVAL AT BAPTIST CHURCH

Meetings Growing In Interest and Attendance Every Day.

The revival at the Baptist church is growing in interest and attendance. Pastor Vinyard is doing the strongest work he has ever done since coming to Charlevoix. The church is being greatly revived and great results are expected.

Prof. Spencer, who recently resigned as professor of music and voice culture in Ewing college, is certainly a wonderful man in his profession and is leading in all the song services of the revival. Everybody is invited to join in the campaign. Services each evening at 7:30.

Went to East Jordan.

Some 15 members of the Charlevoix Relief Corps drove to East Jordan, Saturday, and were entertained by the East Jordan Relief Corps. A very enjoyable time is reported by the visiting members, especially during the noon hour, when a fine dinner was served.

Gave Miscellaneous Showar.

Miss Florence Hanshew and Mrs. Ward Bennett entertained a party of 14 young ladies at Mrs. Bennett's home last Thursday evening, the occasion being a miscellaneous shower for Miss Enid Todd, who is to be married shortly.

Spuds Bring High Price.

REWARO OFFERED FOR MISSING MEN

IONIA TRUSTIES TAKE A FRENCH LEAVE

Twenty-five Dollars Reward Offered for Capture of Asa Mahoney and Oscar Richards.

A reward of $25.00 apiece is being offered for the capture or information regarding the whereabouts of Asa Mahoney and Oscar Richards, trustees in the Ionia reformatory, who escaped from that institution last Thursday afternoon, November 2nd. Both of the men had been sentenced for from one to ten years—Richards from East Jordan, for assault with intent to kill and Mahoney from Charlevoix, for rape. The recommendations appended to their sentences would, at the end of a year, have entitled the men to consideration for a parole. When recaptured, as in the course of time they surely will be, both will have to serve their full sentence of ten years and inasmuch as confidence had been placed in them and more than usual liberties allowed them, (which fact led to their escape) all privileges will be taken away. They will be constantly under guard and will have no more opportunity for exercise than is necessary to preserve health.

The men were working on what is known as the State road near the prison farm when they made their getaway and no trace of them has since been discovered.

The local authorities here received circulars giving photographs and bertillion measurements last Saturday.

DIED THURSDAY FROM EFFECTS OF DISEASE

Friends Pay Last Respects to Mrs. Barney Harrington, Saturday.

Mrs. Barney Harrington, whose illness we mentioned in last week's issue, died in the Reycraft hospital Thursday night following an operation made necessary by the effects of phlebetis of the veins, from which Mrs. Harrington had suffered for many weeks. Her death was not unexpected as the nature and progress of the disease left little grounds for hope of recovery.

The body was brought to Charlevoix, Friday, and the funeral was held from her home Saturday morning, Rev. Lloyd C. Vinyard officiating. Pall bearers were selected from the membership of the Loyal Order of Moose of which the deceased was a member. The body was taken to Brookside cemetery for burial.

Hallowe'en Entertainment.

Too late to appear in last week's issue of the Courier came notice of the Hallowe'en entertainment given to the post office clerks and rural carriers with their wives, by Postmaster and Mrs. T. G. Finucan. The house was decorated in true Hallowe'en style. The usual games were played and stunts performed and dainty collation was served during the evening.

CAUGHT WITH GOOOS ON THEM

ILLEGAL FISHING ON PINE LAKE MUST CEASE

Sheriff Novak to Be Commended On Action Taken—Violations Have Been Frequent.

Rumors of illegal fishing on Pine Lake have stirred the hearts of true lovers of clean sport and fair play for several years, but it remained for these rumors to be substantiated last Thursday evening, when the depredators were caught, almost red handed.

Two members of the Charlevoix Rod and Gun club received a quiet tip Sunday that certain persons had been netting on Pine lake for several nights past and that on the evening in question they were about to again lift their nets. The two promptly went to look up the skipper of the game warden's boat then lying in this port and found the boat tied to the wharf and the captain, Charles Smith, absent at his home near Walloon Lake. Positive from the accuracy of their information that the offenders might be rounded up then and there if quick action were taken, they got Sheriff Charles Novak to take the case and Charley promptly started for the scene of action with Sam Hamilton and George Swailes, Hamilton and Swailes running the game boat and Charley towing behind in a rowboat. After lying in the channel near the Pere Marquette bridge for some time a boat came to view on Pine lake, and Novak and his party watched its operations for some little time. Finally the poachers headed for shore, upon which Novak slipped his tow line and crept quietly upon them with the row boat, taking care to keep in the shadows as much as possible. When they docked their boat, Charley flashed his pocket light and discovered William Duba and a companion. When asked they vigorously denied having any fish, but by this time the others had come up with the warden's boat and boarding the poachers' craft discovered about 200 pounds of fish—many undersized whitefish with a liberal sprinkling of rainbow and steelhead trout. So completely had the two been taken by surprise that they had no time to dump their catch overbonrd, as the sheriff feared they might. The boat and its crew were taken into custody to be turned over to Deputy Warden Smith on his return. Duba, when questioned, told conflicting stories, saying that he had brought the fish with him from East Jordan, then reversing himself to say that he was taking the fish to that place. Young Potter, a fisherman who had accompanied Duba on a previous expedition in Lake Michigan the preceding Saturday, claimed that their entire catch on that occasion had been turned over to him as wages. This makes Duba's version of the case look pretty thin. Warden Smith, when summoned to Charlevoix the next day, declared, after a review of the facts, that there was not enough evidence to convict Duha.

However, that may be, the presence of the undersized fish in the catch of Sunday night, in the Courier's opinion, furnishes sufficient cause of action. It may be also said that the Charlevoix Rod and Gun club have gone to considerable trouble and expense to restock the streams of this vicinity and its members are determined to put a stop to the brazen violations of the law which have been known to be going on for several years past, evidence of which, however, it has been impossible to secure.

Rainbow and steelhead trout fishing in Pine Lake is one of Charlevoix's chief attractions, and hundreds of summer visitors are called here by this fact alone. Continued poaching on the fishing grounds and especially in Pine lake, would be the cause of a financial loss hard to estimate.

Members of the Charlevoix Rod and Gun club and our citizens in general look to the officers of the state game department for protection. Violations have been numerous, both on Pine lake and on the inland lakes and small trout streams. Arrests for violations have been few and far between, and residents here, interested in this line of sport, have become disgusted with the apparent neglect of the officers of the state game department to put a stop to such violation. Hardly a week goes by but several rumors are heard on the street concerning violations of various nature. So far, officers of the game department have proven themselves unable or unfit to cope with the situation.

Instead of appointing deputy wardens on the various lakes and streams in this vicinity, they have made a feeble effort to cover the ground themselves, appearing on the scene usually after the acts have been committed and all possibility of apprehending the violators has passed.

It is the opinion among the majority of sportsmen here that local wardens should be named—men who know the ground and who also know where to look for violations. If the salary of at least one of the deputy state game wardens was distributed in $100 portions among responsible guides on the lakes in and around Charlevoix, it is safe to say that within a short time violations would cease. Under the present conditions, in our estimation, it is a farce—a situation that should be remedied at once.

BOTH REPUBLICANS AND OEMOCRATS CLAIM VICTORY AT POLLS

Hardest Battle of Ballots Known for Years—Late Bulletins Indicate Election of Wilson—Result Hard to Fortell.

As we go to press it seems certain that Charles Evans Hughes has been elected president of the United States, although Democratic leaders are clinging to the hope that the country vote in the middle western states yet may turn the balance in their favor.

At 10:00 o'clock today, the Western Union gave out information that leads one to believe that Hughes wins for president. According to this information the electoral vote will stand 288 for Hughes and 244 for Wilson. Late advices last night stated that unless there was a land slide for President Wilson on the Pacific coast, the election for Hughes is certain.

At 9:30 last night both the Associated Press and the United Press conceded Hughes' election by a decided majority.

Information From Last Bulletins Received.

New York—The New York Times, which supported President Wilson during the campaign, concedes the election of Charles E. Hughes. The Times also announced that Hughes had carried all of New England, Illinois and Indiana as well as the state of New York.

Chicago—The Chicago Herald, which has supported President Wilson, in its first edition, admitted that the president was from 50,000 to 100,000 votes behind Hughes in Illinois.

Milwaukee—Reports from Wisconsin show a tremendous drift toward Hughes, and later reports confirm this statement, the state going strong for Hughes.

New York—Returns from 2,958 districts out of 3,680 outside New York city gives Hughes 471,578, Wilson 345,803.

Detroit—Republican headquarters concede that Wilson will carry Maryland by 30,000.

Florida—38 counties out of 52, incomplete, give Wilson 6,670, Hughes 1,521.

Boston—1,044 precincts give Hughes 231,493, Wilson 215,784.

Detroit—It is estimated that the entire Republican state ticket will be elected by a majority of not less than 20,000. In some congressional districts the fight is warm between contestants. In some counties in the state the race between Hughes and Wilson is close. Cheboygan county gives less than 150 for Hughes, Emmet less than 200 for Hughes, Otsego but nine for Hughes and Alpena county will go for Hughes less than 500.

Claims Wilson Is Making Steady Gains.

(By United Press Association.)

New York, Nov. 8, 3:00 p. m.—President Wilson is making steady gains this afternoon in two states, Minnesota and California, the carrying of either of which would insure his election. Regarding these two as doubtful, with New Hampshire, New Mexico and Oregon, according to United Press reports, Wilson accrues 256 electoral votes, Hughes 238. President Wilson therefor requires only 10 votes for re-election. At 2:00 o'clock Senator Hillis, of New Hampshire, notified Chairman McCormick that complete unofficial returns give Wilson 35,000 majority in New Hampshire.

Hughes closeted with advisors at Hotel Waldorf this afternoon. President spent forenoon at golf.

Detroit—Following latest figures, Michigan balloting, with 1,117 precincts out of 2,260 in state, gave Hughes 165,800, Wilson 139,000, Sleeper 150,115, Sweet 105,200. For prohibition 199,960, against 148,600. Republican headquarters estimate election of entire state ticket.

New York—At 3:15 this afternoon, Chairman McCormick stated absolutely that Wilson was re-elected.

Republican Carry Entire County Ticket.

Charlevoix county elected the entire Republican ticket, although in many precincts there were more Democratic votes cast than in many years. While the returns are as yet incomplete, is safe to say there will be an average of near 500 for the Republican candidates. Beaver Island went Democratic as did also Charlevoix township. In Marion township, one of the strongest Republican townships in the county, some 40 Democratic votes were cast for President Wilson.

Charter Revision Carries.

The amendment voted on in the city of Charlevoix relative to the revision of the charter carried by a majority of 61, every ward in the city giving it a small majority.

The amendment relative to fraternal societies was defeated in the city by 223 votes. Returns from the county received show a small majority against it.

HOW

To Make Shabby or Old Furniture Look New

OLD furniture looks shabby in the spring, when almost everything else is fresh and clean, but it can be made like new with the expenditure of a little time and money.

First the old finish must be taken off the furniture. This may be done with a varnish remover, which may be purchased at a hardware store. Two quarts will remove the varnish from all the furniture in the average living room. This remover should be applied with a brush or a cloth and allowed to stand for a few minutes, it must then be rubbed or scraped off. After this the scraper should be used until the wood is reached, because a varnish will not take a stain.

If the wood is an open grain piece, such as chestnut, walnut or oak, a filler must be used to make a smooth surface. This may be bought or prepared at home. The formula for the preparation is as follows: One pound of cornstarch and three-fourths pint of boiled linseed oil or turpentine colored with burned umber or lamphlack. After the stain and the filler have been applied the wood may be covered with a floor or furniture varnish or a wax. If a wax finish is desired the stain should be put on and allowed to stand until the next day, when the wax or varnish may be applied. Wax is the preferable finish since it does not gather up the dust particles so readily as the varnish and is more easily applied.

Selecting Breeding Hens.

A method which will improve the poultry stock very quickly and which is within the reach of every farmer is to have a small special mating from which to select his male birds for breeding each year. Select a few, if only four, of your ideal females, the ones which in your estimation are those that you want the whole flock to be like. Every flock has four or five females in it that are best. Put these birds in a separate pen. It is not always necessary to build a special house for them. Any place where they will be reasonably comfortable and separate from the rest of the flock is suitable. To these few females mate your ideal cock bird.

Colors of Young Chicks.

You cannot tell by the color of a chick when hatched how well it will be marked later on. Neither should you judge a chick by the downy covering which it first takes on. The pure white specimens will many times look shabby with dark down on the back. The particolored birds will have a mottled appearance that makes the beginner feel dubious about the purity of the strain. But let the birds grow, and you will find that they will come out all right. The chicks when two months old are altogether different in color from the time they were hatched.—Kansas Farmer.

Fattening Fowls.

Caging fowls separately for two weeks while fattening them will produce tender meat, while, on the other hand, where fowls are yarded they are apt to nag and chase each other so that the muscles harden and the meat toughens.

How to Mix a Homemade Fertilizer For Foliage Plants.

A splendid fertilizer for all pot plants and evergreens may be made in this way: Dissolve one can of lye in two gallons of water, and put in enough bones to make a thick, crumbly mass. A few spoonfuls of this in your watering pot once a week will give a wonderful growth and brightness to all foliage plants

Are New Yorkers American?

The most New Yorkish of ladies, who, after an excessively brief, gay winter at home, habitually betook herself to the Riviera, to London, to Paris and to the usual spring, summer and autumn haunts of European elegance, was once asked by an intelligent and curious foreigner some question concerning the habits and customs of her compatriots. She paused, meditated prettily, says Harrison Rhodes in Harper's Magazine, and then made a profoundly significant reply.

"I'm not sure," she said, "that I'm the best person to ask. You see, I'm a New Yorker, and I know so few Americans."

Got a New Name.

Two brothers of the name of Lawes, creating a disturbance at the Dublin theater, were called to order by the celebrated Felix McCarthy, who was in the same box. One of them, presenting his card, said:

"You shall hear from one of us. Our name is Lawes."

"Lawes, is it?" quoth Felix. "Then I'll give you an addition to your name," and, exerting his well known strength, handed them out of the box, exclaiming, "Now, by the powers, you're both outlaws!"

Soldier Boys Have Poor Opinion of Conditions in Texas—Ready for Patrol Duty.

(BL HAROLD W. USHER)

El Paso, Texas, Nov. 2.—The camp site of the 33rd regiment is on mud flat about 200 yards from the Mexican boundary. Around are Mexican huts, built of mud and straw. To our north lies Mt. Franklin, which is 2,200 feet high, and back of it lies the outskirts of the Sierra Nevada mountains.

You hear about Texas, the beautiful southern state, but the guy who wrote this never lived here. The beautiful scenery consists of sand dunes, rock, cactus and greasy Mexicans.

El Paso is built at the mouth of a pass through the mountains on the banks of the Rio Grande. It is a city of about 85,000 people, over half being Mexicans. In certain parts of the city the surroundings are entirely Mexican. Due to the revolution about 8,000 refugees from Mexico are now in El Paso.

Fort Bliss is the main regular camp, about 40,000 soldiers being stationed there. These include the Massachusetts, Michigan, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, North Carolina and Georgia guardsmen. Camp Cotton and Camp Stewart are the largest national guard camps. All together, there are about 150,000 soldiers here.

The country about El Paso is nothing but sand and cactus. From the top of Mt. Franklin one can look in all directions and see nothing but a forlorn desert. The town is thoroughly western, shooting scrapes being common and a saloon on each corner.

In spite of all this, El Paso is a nice place for the soldiers to camp. The town is always lively and furnishes plenty of amusement for the boys.

The troops have been put under regular army discipline. Drills take up the morning hours and the afternoon is taken up by loafing around camp and resting. Very soon we will be placed on border patrol and border guard. We usually hike out every morning and drill several hours. The course we cover is thickly dotted with cactus, under which are hidden rattlesnakes and other vermin and poisonous insects. At times we are compelled to crawl on our hands and knees through the cactus. After drill the officers take us back to camp where we put in our hours of leisure picking thorns out of our hides preparatory to the next day's hike.

Ball ammunition has been issued to every man and guards are under orders to shoot if any person crossing the line refuses to halt. And believe me, the greasers set up and take notice when the Michigan guardsmen speak to them.

Directly across the international bridge lies Juarez, the Monte Carlo of Mexico. Here every Sunday bull fights and cock fights are pulled off. One hundred and ten days of continuous racing starts November 1 at the Juarez race tracks, which is one of the best in the world.

Al Barnes' circus (which I believe was in or near Charlevoix during the summer) arrived today. Having made the Michigan tour, many questions were asked them about our home state, especially Charlevoix county.

Refuges from Mexico are coming into El Paso every day, driven out of their own country by starvation and cruel treatment. Of all the dirty bunch of human beings I have ever seen, these Mexicans take the cake. When at home they live in mud shacks with their cows, chickens and pigs. From their looks the only bath they ever had was when they fell into the river or were caught out in a rain storm.

You ought to see the country here when it rains. All the sand and alkalia dust turns into the muddiest mud you ever saw. You can go out and pick up a couple of acres of land on your feet most any place around here. I am of the opinion that if the boys from Michigan ever get the opportunity to return to their home state, they will be perfectly contented to stay there.

Troops from Georgia arrived here today and those from Florida are expected soon. We are (although we are sorry to say it) looking forward to the big Thanksgiving spread now being arranged for. But we would far rather spend the day in our northern Michigan homes.

The Word "Shibboleth."

The word "shibboleth," now applied to any kind of party watchword, has a Scriptural origin. In the fifth and sixth verses of the twelfth of Judges we read: "And the Gileadites took the fords of Jordan against the Ephraimites, and it was so that when any fugitive of Ephraim said, Let me go over, the men of Gilead said unto him, Art thou an Ephraimite? If he said Nay, then they said unto him, Say now Shibboleth, and he said Sibboleth, for he could not frame to pronounce it right. Then they laid hold of him and slew him at the fords of Jordan. And there fell at that time of Ephraim forty and two thousand."

Shipping Pigs in Baskets.

The lot of domestic animals in the far east is not enviable, particularly when enduring transport from one place to another. Fowls are always sent to market with their legs tied, so that it is impossible for them to move. Live pigs are transported in the Straits Settlements by steamer or barge, shipped singly in wicker work baskets just large enough to take a single pig. In this cramped and uncomfortable position, for the animal's legs are tied, making it nothing more than a living log, it is often shipped long distances. Water is thrown over the animals, and occasionally they are allowed to drink, but nothing is given them to eat.—Popular Science Monthly.

"Dumping."

"Dumping" is a word of English origin designating a commercial practice which consists of establishing for one and the same product two scales of prices—viz, a relatively high price for the home market and lower prices, variable according to circumstances and in many cases lower than the cost of production, for foreign markets.—Paris Nature.

Entered at Charlevoix Post Office as second class matter.

Editors are born boosters. The other day the editor was solicited to join a lodge and was handed a petition printed by a supply house in another city. He got a dun from a merchant in a government stamped envelope and written on a gargling oil statement. He made a purchase at a store and got a duplicate bill printed at Chicago and wrote a check on a blank printed in Denver. Ye gods, how can an editor expect to join lodges and pay bills on such treatment as that and all the time tell the people to trade at home? Editors have to be born boosters, prepared to live on herring and stand for anything.

The apologists for the administration explain the sending of more troops to the Mexican border by saying that these men should "have their share of the training." The training for what, may we ask? If Wilson has "kept us out of war," and intends to keep us out of war, why do these men, or any other men, need any training?

Offagain! Onagain! Goneagain—Finnagan. August, 1913, Wilson placed an embargo on export of arms and ammunition to Mexico—February, 1914, he took it off. October, 1914, he put it on. May, 1914, he took it off. October, 1915, he put it on. In the meantime hundreds of American citizens and soldiers were killed by the Mexicans with American arms and ammunition obtained through Wilson's wobbling.

The first year of war England spent about $5,000,000 a day. The Democrats at the last session of congress appropriated public money at the rate of more than $8,000,000 a day. Wilson's "peace" is still raging.

A Correction.

The Courier made a bad blunder in last week's notice of the Pomona Grange meeting with South Arm Grange. The Courier stated that South Arm would have a 50 degree team to do initiation work. It should have read that South Arm would have a 5th degree team to do initiatory work. Mistakes will happen at times, thus we make the above explanation.

LURING AN AUDIENCE.

Just a Little Twist in a Shakespeare Title Did the Trick.

There was once a traveling theatrical company, so the tale of venerable age and long improbable veracity goes, that was booked to play in a town a melodrama considered as suitable to the prospective audience. By accident the necessary scenery and costumes were sent ahead to the next stopping place, which was the capital of the state, where a Shakespearean play was to be presented at the governor's special request, and the costumes and accessories for the Shakespeare performance were the ones that arrived. There was no time to right the mistake, but there was time to rush a new set of posters advertising the new play.

"Come one, come all!" they invited the public. "Do not miss the opportunity of a lifetime! The great comic, historic, romantic, emotional drama 'As You Like It, or the Wrestler's Sweetheart!' as triumphantly performed before the queen of England at the Globe theater, London, with the distinguished author in the cast!"

Naturally the public inferred that this interesting performance had taken place before Queen Victoria during the last London season rather than in the presence of good Queen Bess some 300 years before. Naturally also the gymnastic suggestions of the ingenious subtitle were not lost upon them. They turned out in force. The town attended almost to a man. They did not think much of the melancholy Jaques, but they would have endured him another seven ages for the sake of Rosalind!—Youth's Companion.

A FLOATING FORTUNE.

The Right Kind of Whale Is Heavily Freighted With Wealth.

First let us dispel the popular idea that a whale is a fish. It is not a fish, but an animal. And even though it lives in the water it can be drowned. A fish extracts oxygen from the water and takes it through its gills. But the whale has to rise to the surface and get a supply of oxygen from the air. When it does this it spouts water to make room for air, and the fishermen say, "There she blows!"

A whale has a large, flat tail, about eighteen feet across. Every fish has an upright tail. That is because fish need their tails only to act as rudders. But a whale, when he needs oxygen, has to beat down the water and get to the surface in bounds. That's the reason his tail is flat.

The baleen, or whalebone whale, carries all the whalebone in his mouth. It hangs down from his upper jaw in a vast network. He eats the smallest sort of jellyfish, etc. Having no teeth, he swims right into a shoal of things that form his food, and the network of whalebone acts as a huge fishing net. Whalebone is worth $10,000 a ton, and one whale may carry one and a half tons of it. Besides whalebone, we get tons of oil from the whale. It is used for ointments and very fine candles. And from a certain species of whale we get ambergris, which is worth from $10 to $30 an ounce. The whale is a floating fortune.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Knife Duels in Mexico.

A duel between cattle herders on the Mexican plains is about as savage and deadly a manner of fighting as one could possibly imagine. Each opponent extends his left arm, and a third party who has been selected to act as referee binds their wrists together with a thong of rawhide. He then places a knife in the right hand of each, and the fight is on. Needless to say, it does not last long. Every stab may be calculated upon to do damage, and it often happens that both duelists receive fatal wounds. Yet, in spite of the severe rules of the game, there are men who become experts and terrorize a whole neighborhood. They pride themselves on being able to strike so quickly and so surely that they can kill an opponent with the first blow and get away unscathed.—Exchange.

When Tea Was Dear.

Those who grumble at the price of tea should turn for consolation to the records of its price in early times. At its first introduction into England, about the middle of the seventeenth century, tea fetched anything between £6 and £10 a pound, and though a fall in price quickly took place the East India company still had to pay over £4 for the two pounds of tea which it presented the king. However, even thus it is doubtful if the tea merchants got very fat, seeing that the importation of some 4,000 pounds in 1678 was enough to glut the market for some years.—London Chronicle.

That Last Word.

"I can't understand why men should complain about their wives having the last word. I never objected to mine having the last word."

"You don't?"

"Not a bit. I'm always thankful when she gets to it."—Boston Transcript.

Keep It Awake.

"My boy," said the successful merchant, "never let your capital lie idle. Remember that money talks, but it doesn't talk in its sleep." — Boston Post.

Ups and Downs.

"Oh, well, everybody has his ups and downs!"

"That's right. Just at present I'm down pretty low because I'm hard up."

Happiness is a bird we pursue our life long without catching it.—Virey.

Voluable Misinformation.

Deer folks: Now I know why editors go mad. I ben trying to run this paper while the editor in on his vakashun. For three (3) days and nites I ben reading questions and trying to answer them, and if I don't quit I'll be going around talking to myself. I'm going to answer a few more then go to the ball game.—(Jimmie, the office boy.)

1. What is limberneck? (J. Jones.)

Limbernek in the country is a strange disease of fowls and chikens. In the city it is a disease of human persons caused by watching fouls—and chikens.

2. Do small cows give condensed milk? (Mabel B.)

No, Mable. Condensed milk is made by trying to get a quart of milk into a "quart milk-bottle."

3. Please tell me how hash is made. (W. M.)

Hash is not made. It akumulates.

4. Is it all right to feed hogs corn-in-the-ear? (G. K.)

No. Put it in the trof and let them help themselves.

5. I am in love whith a homely girl who works for us but she don't seem to care for me, while a pretty girl with lots of money wants to marry me. What shall I do? (Will M.)

Marry the one you love, and send me the name and address of the other one.

6. My hair is beginning to fall out. What can I get to keep it in?

A sack.

7. Please tell me how to raise a nice fat hog of about 500 pounds.

Get a derrik.

8. How can I tell when the water is the right temperature for bathing baby? (Young Mother.)

If the kid gets red and hollers, the water is too hot. If he gets blue and shivers, it's too cold.

9. I am 40 years old; have a nice little farm, and am thinking of taking a wife. What would you advise? (Old Batch.)

I would advise you to be kerful whose wife you take.

10. Our old red bull is chasing me round a forty acre field. What shall I do? (Mike F.)

I don't know, but don't give up, Mike. The editor will be back in a week.

BOY SCOUTS WERE DEFEATED

OUTCLASSED BY PETOSKEY FOOT BALL PLAYERS

Opponents Prove to Be "Lightweights" In Name Only—Score 19 to 7.

Charlevoix Boy Scouts went to Petoskey in a body Saturday afternoon and played the Petoskey "Lightweights" on their home grounds. Petoskey players, far from being "lightweights," outclassed our boys in this respect and won the game on their ability to puncture the line, the score being 19 to 7. Most of the gains were made by line smashing formations. The forward pass waa used a few times and Charlevoix acored their only touchdown on a pass to Cartier, who made a brilliant 30 yard run.

Dr. VanLeuven and Dr. Mudgett, of Petoskey, were the officials of the game. The line up was as follows:

This fall sport is providing an attraction for a large number of people who are enthusiastic enough to come long distances to witness the games.

OFF ONCE MORE FOR THE NORTH WOODS

Local Hunters to Spend Next Two Weeks in Quest of Venison.

Once more the north woods will re-echo the crack of the rifle, and if the "horn of the hunter" is not "heard on the hill" he will probably have a "horn" with him and there will be some horns in the baggage car on the return trip. It's just as popular as ever, and here are a few of the local nimrods.

A. L. Fitch, Hugh Ackert, Robert Madill and Charles See leave Friday of this week for n point 20 miles northwest of Newberry to hunt the deer. They are the advance guard of a party, the remaining members of which—A. J. Hamilton, George Stafford, Dit Hammond, Art Alcox, Richard Lewis and Lyman Benton—will leave at a later date, not yet definitely determined.

Dar Meech, Harry Mohrmann, Ed Chaloupka, of Charlevoix, and Judge E. R. Harris, L. Van Skiver and Ed Boss, of Ellsworth, left Tuesday for their cabin, 40 miles down the Tahquamenon river from Newberry in the northern peninsula. The party has three weeks supplies and expect to make a "killing."

Appreciates Support Given.

The final count is in. Our county is dry by 800 and Home Rule is defeated by 1,000. The issue was not an experiment, but an experience. In 1912 the majority was 539. After four years of the dry regime since the last election the people have given their verdict in favor of the drys with their eyes wide open.

I want to express my sincere gratitude to the loyal men and women who co-operated so willingly with me in this great fight, and especially the newspapers of the county that, with one exception, refused to take the dirty money of the saloon. Time and space would fail me should I attempt to mention in detail the factors that helped to make Charlevoix county dry. Again expressing my sincerest gratitude I remain,

Your obedient servant,
QUINTON WALKER,
Manager.

LIVE STOCK SHOW

To Be Held This Year In Chicago December 2 to 9.

If public interest in the International Live Stock Exposition was ever justified, this is the moment. Not only is commercial live stock production profitable to an unprecedented degree, but the task of rehabilitating the industry must be vigorously prosecuted if the nation is to be assured of an adequate supply of meat.

Improvement of live stock is the need of the hour. As cost of production increases, breeders and feeders cannot achieve maximum results with the inferior and mediocre grades of cattle that constitute too large a percentage of the stuff now reaching market.

It is an accepted axiom that the profit is in the gain. It corresponds with the motto of transportation specialists that the money is in the straps, meaning passengers who are not furnished seats.

Profit in handling scrub line stock is questionable and possibly only during periods of abnormally high prices. If cattle raising is to be placed on a permanently staple basis, the present system must be abandoned.

The management of the International Live Stock Exposition is exploiting an idea that is slowly gaining ground. Education is a proverbially slow process and progress is attained only by persistent endeavor. To insure maximum profits at minimum cost in the sphere of meat production is the mission of the International Live Stock Exposition. That mission is primarily designed to benefit the producer, incidentally it will work to the advantage of the carrier, the manufacturer and the consumer, consequently its success is desirable from many angles.

From a utilitarian standpoint the International Live Stock Exposition, which will this year be held from December 2 to 9, stands in the front rank of the world's educational institutions and no farmer or stockmen can afford to stay away.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN HAPPENINGS

Events of Interest to Courier Readers

Peculiar Situation Arises.

A peculiar situation in the wet and dry fight may arise in Emmet county next spring owing to the filing of petitions by the wets calling for a local option election in April, 1917.

The statewide prohibition amendment is so worded that if carried it will place Michigan in the dry column after May 1, 1918. The year between May 1, 1917, and May 1, 1918, may be made either wet or dry in Emmet county, dependent on the result of the local option election.

At the October meeting of the board of supervisors the wets filed petitions asking for a local option election next April and such an election has been ordered by the board.

If Emmet county votes dry November 7 and wishes to remain dry from May 1, 1917, to May 1, 1918, it will again go dry next April.

Fire Bug at Work.

The recent fire at the W. L. McManus residence in Petoskey may develop some startling things, say firemen, who declare they found the rugs and furniture saturated with kerosene oil and holes cut through the floors and into the roof, the fire set in several places in the basement and other signs of the blaze originating by anything but accident. The state fire department is investigating.

One Dead in Fight.

A fight at the shack formerly occupied by the late Charles Lang just south of the brewery, near Petoskey, resulted in the death of Martin Blouse, Sunday night of last week, and John and Archie Sclsilen are being held until a coroner's jury can hear the case.

John and Archie have been batching it at the Lang shack, and from all that can be learned Blouse came there Sunday evening primed for trouble. There had been bad blood between the men before and at 9 o'clock trouble began in earnest.

The sheriff says he believes the men had been drinking freely and that none of the three were sober. The quarrel evidently started in that shack and the men went out of doors or fell through the door in their fight.

A broken up chair with some of the larger pieces covered with blood tells of how the dead man was killed. His head is all crushed to pieces and shows evidences of his having received a terrible blow on the right side and back of his skull. The two men had dragged their victim about ten rods from the shack to the gate in the fence near the road and it is believed by the officers they were taking the body to Mud lake.

Sheriff Purple and Prosecuting Attorney Sweeney are investigating the case today.

Will Rebuild Paper Mill.

The announcement that the Petoskey paper mill will resume operations immediately has been made by the resident manager, A. B. Mudgett.

General Manager A. A. Wheat, of the Wheat Paper company, of Elkhart, Indiana, of which the mill is a branch plant, was in Petoskey last week going over the plans with Mr. Mudgett and meeting with the city councilmen.

The city council agreed to furnish free electrical current for power for the plant for the next six months on or before the first of December until the first of June, 1917.

This will give the paper mill company an opportunity to erect fire proof buildings for their own new power plant.

The company plans to operate the pulp manufacturing part of the plant to its fullest capacity, starting at the earliest possible moment. Work of repairing the buildings and installing electrical motors to drive the machinery started Monday. The work will require from two to four weeks' time to complete.

WEST MICHIGAN CHICAGO EXHIBIT

BIG ADVERTISING BUSINESS SCHEME ON

Railroads and Development Bureau Doing Much by This Work for This Region.

"Where are the splices in those 16-foot stalks of corn?" "Certainly those apples were never grown near Chicago!" These and similar statements and inquiries are common at the Western Michigan exhibit at the Chicago Herald bureau in the Ashland block, Chicago.

It has been said by persons competent to judge that the Western Michigan exhibit is more educational, more interesting and more convincing than any other of the 30 exhibits from all parts of the United States on the floor. This exhibit is a part of the 20 months' contract co-operatively entered into by the G. R. & I. railway, P. M. railroad, E. J. & S. railroad and the Western Michigan Development bureau.

The booth itself is constructed of white birch and well lighted. In it are exhibits of various agricultural products from Western Michigan, and an automatic stereopticon machine with a magazine capacity for 84 slides, constantly showing hand-colored lantern slides, changing every eight seconds.

Also, as a part of this membership, Western Michigan is produced in the "movies." Three sets of films of 2,100 feet each are in constant circulation. The one circuit serving 1,800 theatres throughout the United States. Another film is used on an education circuit by the federal bureau of economics, which not only covers the United States but every foreign country as well. The third film is constantly on exhibition at the Herald bureau where prospectivs homeseekers, tourists, people from western Michigan and any others interested may see it either in the general run with other films or upon application. This film has already been used in several towns in Western Michigan and is booked for showing at a number of other places during the winter.

There are numerous other features connected with the membership, all of which make it one of the biggest and most costly advertising and publicity campaigns ever entered into to develop Western Michigan's unlimited resources.

Those financially interested in the enterprise are enthusiastic over the proposition and express their full confidence in the ultimate results to be realized. Already results are manifest and the project will continue throughout 1917.

HOW TO GROW VIOLETS IN YOUR BACK YARD.

Select a somewhat shady, well drained spot for the violet bed. Take away the top three or four inches of soil, unless it is well enriched loam, and replace it with equal parts of well rotted manure, leaf mold and thoroughly decomposed sod.

Late in April the plants may be set out. Usually plants can be obtained at a small cost from growers who are glad to thin out their beds. Put them six to eight inches apart each way. They must have plenty of water all summer. In the early fall put a cold frame over the bed. Cover the plants with straw or leaves after the first hard freeze and do not let them thaw. Then put the wooden shutters over the top of the frame. When thawing commences, in February or March, the wooden shutters should be replaced with glass ones. In the warm part of the day keep the shutters raised a little to let in the air. Never allow the plants to freeze again after they have started to grow.

How to Select a Desirable Fishing Line For Reels.

For a line one of the many splendid braided silk casting lines is the most desirable, but the hard braided brand must also be given some consideration, since the softer silk has a tendency to swell and stick to the rod when wet. Enameled lines, which are indispensable to the fly caster, are not suited for free reel casting, where the requirements demand a line that will run freely and smoothly.

How to Remove the Stain of Mildew From Cottons.

Mildew may be removed with salts of lemon solution, using either the crystals or powdered salts. Chloride of lime will also take it out, but care must be exercised not to burn the material. Directions for using on can.

Wit and Humor.

The quality of wit exists wherever imagination percolates through the understanding; the sediment is the grain gold of wit. But the quality of humor, depending upon various moral straits, exists only wherever a broad imagination is combined with a sweet and tolerant moral sense that is devoid of malice and all uncharitableness and at peace with all mankind. A petulant egotism may exist with wit, but never with humor. • • • Where there is no sense of incongruity there can be no sense of humor. That sense is man's expedient to make his mortality endurable. The laughter of man is the contentment of God.—John Weiss.

"THOUGHT I WAS DOOMED. TANLAC SAVED ME. I WANT EVERYONE TO KNOW THIS."

The above remark was made to the Tanlac representative by Jos. McClure, who lives just outside the city limits of Jackson. He also said:

"My nerves were in such a condition that I was a physical wreck. In fact, I was so bad I could not attend to my work and had to get a man to take my place and do my work for me. I could not sleep either.

"My family as well as myself thought I was a doomed man but you can see for yourself what Tanlac did for me. I am at my old work again and as well as ever. My nerves are all right and I can eat again after losing my appetite for so long. My sleep is restful and refreshing.

"I took Tanlac because I saw what it had done for others and I want to say I think it is a winner.

"I want everyone to know what Tanlac did for me and I live just outside of the city on West Main Road. I get my mail at the general delivery in town and will answer any letters of inquiry addressed to me, in regard to the wonderful miracle Tanlac performed for me. I feel as if it saved my life. What more could I say in praise."

TANLAC CAN BE OBTAINED HERE ONLY AT THE STORE OF B. A. HERMAN.

Tanlac can also be obtained at the following stores: W. A. Hyslop at Boyne City, F. J. Fessender at Central Lake.

TRADE IS POTATO MAD SAYS WRITER

PRICES NEVER SAW SUCH HIGH LEVELS

Correspondent Writes that Growers of Tubers Have Awakened from Dream.

Describing the potato situation the New York correspondent of the Chicago Packer writes:

"The trade of the country has gone potato mad. Prices never saw such high levels as ruled last week and in the face of it all the offerings at these wonderful values are extremely light. Who ever heard of the farmers in Maine getting $1.25 to $1.50 per bushel at loading stations for their potatoes with buyers swarming around them, cash in hand, crying for the spuds? Those are the prices that were being paid last week.

"Practically the same conditions were existing in New York stste. The farmers were getting $1.35 to $1.50 per bushel at loading stations and the shippers were selling the stock delivered at New York at $1.55 to $1.60 per bushel.

"In the New York yards all kinds of potatoes, no matter where from except Long Island, were selling at $4.50 to $4.75 per 180 pounds bulk.

"Conditions in the potato deal were ruling in all the markets of the country about the same as in New York exeept that many of the middle western markets were higher than this market.

"One of the unexpected things that upset the potato deal entirely this year was the freeze in Michigan about six weeks ago. The trade figured on a pretty good crop of late potatoes in Michigan, but the early cold weather cut it almost in half and killed the vines and the spuds did not mature. Detroit was one of the highest potato markets in the country the fore part of last week.

"Another thing is that the late crop in New York state did not materialize as growers expected it to. The farmers generally through the potato belt looked for 100 to 150 bushels to the acre. As a rule they are now digging from 40 to 65 bushels to the acre.

"The potato grower is the man of the hour; he has just awakened from a ten-year dream; more power to his potato patch."

SPRING HOUSECLEANING.

How It Can Be Made Easy by Adopting a System.

Housecleaning is no longer a thing to be dreaded. If done systematically it becomes as easy as any other household task. To clean a house systematically one must do it one room at a time, co-eds in the Kansas State Agricultural college are taught. This destroys the old custom of having the entire house upset at once, and the cleaning is more thorough than when done by the old method. The same geueral rules will apply to the cleaning of every room from cellar to garret.

First all small articles, including pictnres, should be dusted and taken from the room or put under cover. Ths lighter pieces of furniture should then be removed to another room and those remaining covered. The walls and ceilings should be dusted with a special brush provided for the purpose, or with a hroom covered with a soft cloth. The rugs should be takeu outside and beaten or swept with wet bits of paper.

If the floor is hard wood it should be hrushed with soft brush or strlug mop. This should be done with loug, steady strokes from the corners to the center of the room. The dust should be carried out lumediately. A cedar mop or string mop wet with kerosene is then used, still working from the corners to the center of the room.

After the dust settles, dust all exposed surfaces. The woodwork may he cleaned with a soft cloth, tepid water and a small amount of soap solution. The covers may then be removed from the furuiture and the polished surfaces cleaned with a velvet sponge wet lu tepid water and dried with a chamois skin. The rugs and small articles may then be replaced, and the room is in order with practically no disturbance to the remainder of the house.

POULTRY WISDOM.

Before starting with poultry decide fully the question with yourself as to whether you are after eggs or meat or a combiuation of both eggs and meat.

Don't force your growing chicks into filthy quarters night after night and then wonder at their not doing as they should.

When space is limited for keeping poultry it is best to select those fowls which do well in confinement.

It is of little moment how large or how small a house may be if it is built with the idea of comfortably housing the fowls.

For eggs, and plenty of them, too, use the dainty Leghorns, Minorcas, Camplnes, Anconas and any other of their klud.

Laying stock should have all the feed that they will consume. They need it for the heavy productiou of eggs.

VAN PELT'S TOURING DAIRY

Burlington, Vermont,
Friday, September 29, 1916.

This has been our big day for motoring—171 miles, from nine a. m. to five p. m. and at nine o'clock we took our farewell look at the majestic mountains and the beautiful Lake Placid and Mirror Lake, between which our hotel is located—I don't like to mention the name, as our hill was $10.00 for three of us for supper, breakfast and lodging. We gradually left the mountains behind and passed the state of New York's preserve, where they have been and now are setting out pines of various kinds. We saw some Scotch pines, 10, 12 and 14 feet high, that were set ont in 1905. You will see the same in Mr. Waller's farm, just north of Charlevoix. This stretch was many miles—25, I should judge. Then we came to a level country and quite, if not very barren. This continued through Saranac by Saranac Lake to Malone, New York. From Malone to Chazy we struck the best road we have found for that distance—58 miles. We still had nine and a half miles to go when we phoned the landing to hold the ferry boat for us to take us across the narrow neck of Lake Champlain to Vermont, that we would be there in 15 minntes and we made it all O. K. In fact it was about our average drive—35 to 40 miles per hour from Malone, but we struck a different proposition when we started for Burlington over a clay road and in a hard rain storm, the first real one we had as yet encountered. We skid and we skid, we skidded and we skidded, but the ride was pleasant along the shores of grand old Lake Champlain. In the evening I called on the Misses Kate and Jessie Meech, sisters of our old settler friend and companion, Fred J. Meech, and, of course, had a very pleasant evening.

Eugene Van Pelt and an Irishman were standing on the top of Bald Mountain, situated near my old home near Troy, in Rensselaer county, New York, from the top of which the country for many miles around could be plainly seen and after enjoying the scenery for a short time, Eugene turned to the Irishman and remarked, "Dan, isn't that a beautiful landscape?" Dan looked in the direction Eugene pointed for a short time and turning to him, he said, "Where is it, boss? I don't see him, where is he?" Evidently, Dan did not know the meaning of the word, "Landscape."

Now, we have many people in Charlevoix county who are just like Dan O'Connor. They have never been outside enough to know that the beauty of Charlevoix county far exceeds any other county in our state and they think the whole world is just like it, but, friends, it is not and when the good roads are built that we are going to build and the outside world knows it, we will have to build hotels galore by the dozen to take care of the tourists that will flock to us. No lake is prettier than Pine lake—some have more rugged shores and beautiful forests, as they have in the Adirondacks. There, all along the route, are numerous little hotels that can take care of from 25 to 100 and they are all full. I have paid $1.50 for a chicken dinner, which consisted of one half a small chicken, a few vegetables and pie—and good pie, too, and a cup of coffee and have seen this same man buy 25 chickens at 45 cents each. Also saw farmers peddling sweet corn at 25 cents a dozen and it was the genuine Fred Meech sweet corn, too, or they would not have gotten that price for it. Every few miles and sometimes every few rods, nice new houses (no, excuse me, I should say cottages) have been built. Still others are being built and real estate is improving in price all along the route and nearly every part of Pine lake frontage will sell in your time and mine for from $100 to $300 per acre and with a corresponding value for the land farther back from the shore drive.

Now, come, "boys," let's roll up our sleeves and all pull together and each help to make Charlevoix county one of the great resorts of the United States. It surely will pay us all. Naturally, some will be benefited more than others, but all will get a share and because you will not get as much as your neighbor a few miles away, don't try to spoil the game. Let's all be for Charlevoix county, first, last and all the time.

MANY IN CHARLEVOIX TRY SIMPLE MIXTURE

Many Charlevoix people are surprised at the QUICK action of simple buckthorn bark, glycerine, etc., as mixed in Adler-i-ka. This simple remedy acts on BOTH upper and lower bowel, removing such surprising foul matter that ONE SPOONFUL relieves almost ANY CASE constipation, sour stomach or gas. A few doses often relieve or prevent appendicitis. A short treatment helps chronic stomach trouble. The INSTANT, easy action of Adler-i-ka is astonishing. B. A. Herman, druggist.

A MASTER OF DRAMATIC ART

Many of the patrons of the Charlevoix Lecture Course, have made the statement that they received the value of a season ticket in the first number. But there is something good in store for you on next Friday night, at the opera house, at eight o'clock.

Thomas Brooks Fletcher is one of the greatest lecturers on the platform today. He is a master of dramatic srt, and will entertain you and instruct you. You and the town will ba benefited by your hearing him. The great truths of life and of your relation to the other people of our little town will be better understood and appreciated.

Mr. Fletcher has made himself famous by several of his lectures among which are "Tragedies of the Unprepsred," "The Martrydom of Fools," "Community Deadheads," "The Modern Judas." If you would prefer one of these lectures over another, call the high school office and state your preference.

On Friday at 4 o'clock, at the high school, Mr. Fletcher will give an address before the Charlevoix Commercial club, and the Ladies Literary clubs. We would like a large attandance st this meeting.

The reserve sent sale will be at the Central Drug Storc on Thursday at seven p. m. Single admissions for this number will be only 50 cents.

No admission will be charged for the address at the high school and all are invited. Mr. Fletcher desires to meet as many of the town's business men as possible before the lecture and would appreciate a good representation from the business, social, literary and civic organizations of our city. He comes highly represented and it is claimed by those who have had the pleasure of hearing him before that if Charlevoix is not interested in what he has to say, it will be the first time that such has been the case. He has a message for all nf us, und it is seldom that we have the opportunity of listening to so gifted a lecturer.

Popular Young Couple Spring Surprise On Their Friends.

Friends and relatives of Charles Emrey and Miss Enid Todd have known of their engagement for some time but were pleasantly surprised to hear of their marriage in Petoskey, Tuesday evening. The young couple completely stole a march on the expectant celebrators.

The knot was tied by the Rev. Mr. Harris at the Petoskey Episcopal church, in the presence of the groom's sister, Miss Lillian Emrey and Mr. Earl Preston. The happy pair then left on the 11:40 train over the G. R. & I. for a honeymoon trip to Grand Rapids, Detroit and Chicago.

PRECIOUS PETROLEUM.

It Is a Priceless Resource That Can Never Be Replaced.

"How much petroleum there is in the United Ststes no one knows," writes Franklin K. Lane in an article on "Economic Preparedness," published is the Scieutific Americau. But st the present rate of consumption—265,000,000 barrels s year—it will soon be exhausted, for the geological survey's maximum estimate is 23,000,000,000 barrels.

"Whatever the supply," says Mr. Lane, "it should not be allowed in its crude state to compete with cosl as fuel. Petroleum is a priceless resource, for it can never be replaced. Trees can be grown again on the soil from which they have been taken. But how can petroleum be produced? It has taken ages for nature to distill it in her subterranean laboratory. We do not even know her process. Wa may find a substitute for it, but we have not yet.

"It is practically the one lubricsst of the world today. Not a railroad wheel turns without its way being smoothed by it. We can make light and heat by hydroelectric power, hut the great turbines move on bearings that are smothered in petroleum. From it we get the quick explodisg gas which is to the motor and the airship what air is to the human body. To industry, agriculture, commerce und tha pleasures of life petroleum is now essential."

MUSK IN THE RAW.

It Looks Much Like Axle Grease, but Has a Worse Odor.

Musk in the raw looks a good deal like axle grease and smells worse. The popular notion that the mnsk of commerce is obtained from the muskrat is a mistake.

There is obtaised a somewhat similar perfume from the muskrat, but most of the supply comes from the musk deer, a cresture that is carefully reared in India for the sake of the secretion. The secretion is shipped in the crude state and is used not ouly in the mannfacture of the liqnid perfume sold as musk, but also in very small quantities to give strength and staying power to many perfumes made from the essential oils of flowers.

Curiously enough, the blossoms of two native plants have a noticeably mnsky odor. Osa is the small yellow blossom of a creeping vine known as the musk plant. Its odor is marked and is counterfeited in the commercial perfume called mnsk. The other is the bloodroot. The pure white blossom of that early spring plant has a distinct though dalicate mnsky odor.

A bean known as the mnsk bean is a cheap substitute for animsl mnsk.—Losdon Standard.

Curious Church Architecture.

The parish church of Ormskirk, in Lancashire, England, has a tower and a spire side hy side. The tower is built over the porch at the west end, and the spire is placed as closely as possible to it. The origin of this architectural freak has not been ascertained, hnt there is n tradition to the effect that when Orme, the Sxxon pirate from whom the town derives its nnme, decided to construct a kirk, or church, as sn expiatory offering for his evil deeds his two daughters quarreled over the design for the structurc. One determined to have a tower; the other was equally resolved to have a steeple. As neither of them would give way tha pirate chief acceded to both tbeir wishes, and the curious mny see the tower and spire still keeping watch side hy side on the surrounding country.

Origin of the Hackney.

The hackney horse has given quite a number of nseful words to the language. He and his name came from Normandy originally—haquenee, really a corruption of the Latin for horse—and he wns a riding horse. Being commonly hired out, the name came to be associated with hiring and in course of time also with drudgery. Today there are far more hsckney carriages, within the meaning of the act, without horses thsn with. A literary hack is another form of the snme name, and hackneyed is an obvious derivation from a common source. — London Chronicle.

English Injustice.

An Australian tourist trsveling in the west of Ireland asked an old woman how far it was to the nearest town. She sadly looked st him, then sighed and said:

"It was five nice miles two years ago, but some English brute came over with chains and made it seven, and our hearts are broke walking it ever since. Bad luck to them!"

And she disappeared into the honse, leaving him there.—Illustrated Bits.

A Sad Fact.

What we need in this sad world is not greater equality of opportunity, but a more stable equilibrium in labor. We either have nothing at all to do and starve to death, or have too much to do and work ourselves to death, nntil the chief aim of man wuuld seem to be merely to shuffle off this mortal coil. —Judge.

Praise With a Purpose.

"Not under the circumstances. That was a new cook he was escorting out." Louisville Courier-Journal.

COULDN'T BLUFF FIGHTING PARSON

BEAVER ISLANDERS FAIL TO GET WALKER'S GOAT

Continues Dry Meeting Despite Brickbats and Bullets From Frenzied Celts.

Last Wednesday evening, a delegation of county dry workers, led by Rev. Quinton Walker and Dr. A. M. Wilkinson, met with an unexpected and shocking reception at St. James, Beaver Island, where they attempted to hold a dry meeting.

After supper at the hotel, they were admitted to the town hall by a bunch of enthusiastic and expectant kids, who had no key, but obligingly opened the front door of the hall with a rail, which they used as a battering ram. A small crowd of daring dry supporters and curiosity seekers had gathered in the hall and the meeting was hardly under way when pandemonium broke loose. It seemed to the luckless Charlevoix "drys" as though the entire population of the island had gathered outside the hall with dire intent to "discourage" the meeting. The thunder of fence rails beating against tha sides of the hall drowned the speakers' voices and presently shots broke out and bullets crashed through the window glass, whizzing about the heads of the fighting parson and his gallant little band. One shot perforated a sheet of music which John Walker had placed on a rack in front of him and was trying to follow under considerable difficulty. If you don't believe this, John will show you the identical hole where the bullet passed through, on request.

The racket outside snd the leaden shower finally annoyed the dry speakers to such an extent that Mr. Walker went out on the front steps of the hall and called for the deputy sheriff, who spoke up from the front rank of the crowd, where he had evidently been leading the disturbance and asked the Elder in rather uncivil fashion, what he wanted. Whereupon Mr. Walker intimated that he looked to him (the deputy sheriff), the sworn upholder of law and order, to see that the rioting wss stopped. The parson was then asked if he was looking for trouble, the speaker intimating that he would like nothing better than an opportunity to meet either Mr. Walker or Dr. Wilkinson and do his talking by hsnd; he was also advised not to go back into the hall and attempt to finish the meeting but to take his followers snd get off the island quick if he wanted to get off alive; that they were all "wets" there and weren't at all interested in "dry" propaganda. To which the plucky minister replied thst he wasn't looking for trouble but didn't intend to run away from it, and that his nsme was Walker and that he intended to go hack into the hall and finish the meeting, it being immaterial to him whether he should walk out of the hall afterwards or be carried out. Whereupon he proceeded to make good on his declaration of intentions and the meeting was finished in spite of the painful interruptions.

The Charlevoix bunch were not molested on their way to the boat, with the exception of Cy Beers, who received u sounding thwack over the head with a club, which was aimed nt a lantern that one of the "drys" carried. When they got on hosrd, however, the members of the choir gathered on the deck and commenced to tunefully assert that "Beaver Island Is Going Dry." Whereupon, lumps of coal, stones, bricks, bottles and other lethal missiles began to fly, and the bombardment continued until the boat was out of range. No casualties, except that one of the lumps of coal got in George Block's way and his left arm is still a little lame.

This episode calls for but little comment. We might get quite wrought up over it and call loudly for avenging justice. Probably the ring leaders will be punished, and quite as probably the offense will be repeated when opportunity is again offered. Another case of mob spirit, that's all.

EVERYDAY CAMP LIFE AT EL PASO

INTERESTING LETTER FROM ELLSWORTH SOLDIER BOY

Dreams of Home and Writes Poetry —Greasers, Cactus and Centipedes All Look Alike.

The following letter from DeWitt Patterson gives in detail the trip from Grayling to El Paso, Texas, and daily camp life which will prove of great interest to the "folks at home," whose thought at all times are with their boys on the border:

El Paso, Texas,
Co. I, 33rd Mich. Inf.,
October 30, 1916.

Mr. G. C. Townsend,
Ellsworth, Mich.

Dear Mr. Townsend:

Perhaps I am a little late in letting you hear of our trip south, that is, in order that it may be news to you. However, there might be a few interesting things anyway.

Friday morning, October 6, we broke camp back in Camp Ferris, Grayling. In camp on moving day there is very little commotion. Every man knows what he has to do and he does it. At noon we were loaded, that is, all our goods and were ready to entrain. Our regiment went in four divisions, viz: Headquarters, machine guns and supply company in the first, 1st batallion in second, 2nd batallion in third and the 3rd batallion in fourth division. Of course we were in the fourth division.

We left Grayling about 5:30 in the afternoon and of course our first thought were of supper. From now on our meals were served on pasteboard plates, etc. We still carried our mess kits. After supper we were well on our way and had time to gaze around on conditions in general. We were located near the front of the train in Pullman cars. Everyone was real comfortable and as we were all a little tired we went to bed. We were awakened by "reveille," or what some call "I can't get 'em up." You should have heard some of the fellows dreams. I'll mention Wren's. He said he thought he was back on Boss' steps writing poetry. This is some of what he wrote:

"Who took me home in Edwards car,
Who nursed me when love sick;
Who said you are my guarding star,
Or, boy you are a brick."

He just got done writing the first verse when a bird came flying over and sang boldly out, "Katie did! Katie did!"

I wouldn't dare mention Ruels.

Well, from here on our trip was splendid. We landed in Chicago about 6:30 Saturday night and no one can describe how beautiful it is when lighted up. Sunday morning we woke up in Kentucky. From here on we saw as far as the eye could reach, cotton, sugar cane and tobacco, and oh, yes, negroes. Sunday night we reached Memphis, Tennessee, and there we received treatment that we will always appreciate. At the union depot we were given a fine lunch and at the Y. M. C. A. we were all given a chance to take a swim in their new pool.

From here we crossed into Arkansas, across the Mississippi river, and from here, until about half way across Texas, the journey was much the same. Now we came to the level country. Great ranches, millions of cattle, hundreds of cowboys and they could shoot out the ropes fast enough to tie up Art Ely's or M. R. Nelson's "gentleman animals." The most amusing things were the animals—the prairie dogs, chickens and coyotes.

We reached here Wednesday, October 11, and immediately pitched camp right in El Paso on a block just a little way from the street car line which our top sergeant rightly named Camp De Mud.

We have now drained the land cindered the streets and made mess halls. By the way, we inclose the menu we had for today.

Menu, Sunday, October 29, 1916.

El Paso is n city with about 80,000 inhabitants and about 90,000 soldiers located on the Rio Grande river, at the foot of Mt. Franklin. Every way you look yon see a poisonous insect, a cactus or a greaser. They all look the same to us, but Douglas says they don't all feel alike. He sat on one by mistake while coming down the mountain the other day.

Our work is now similar to that in Grayling only we carry loaded guns all the time and sleep with them under our head. All our boys are in splendid health and send best regards back home.

We enjoy the days here but the night are rather cold so we get to bed early and go to sleep by hearing Corporal Olson playing "Home Sweet Home." We often wish we were there. Often we dream we hear you folks back home singing, "Should Auld Acquaintances Be Forgot." We hope you all answer "no" and let us hear from the whole neighborhood often.

Well, Glen, I must finus now as I have to crawl in bed and keep Orvis warm.

Best regard to yourself and wife.

POOR ROADS COST TIME AND MONEY

Horse Can Pull a Heavier Load on a Good Highway.

BAD CONDITIONS SPELL LOSS

On a Muddy Road the Amount of Weight Drawn Is From Zero to a Maximum of 800 Pounds—On a Smooth Earth Highway a Horse Can Pull From 1,000 to 2,000 Pounds and More on Gravel and Brick.

[Prepared by office of good roads, department of agriculture.]

Every one knows that a horse can pull a heavier load on a good road than on one that is bad. It is, however, a rather difficult matter to calculate just how much he can pull on different kinds of surfaces. After careful study engineers have accepted as fairly accurate the following weights:

On a muddy earth road the amount varies from nothing at all, when the road is in very bad shape, to a maximum of 800 pounds. On a smooth, dry earth road a horse can pull from 1,000 to 2,000 pounds; on a gravel road in bad condition, from 1,000 to 1,500 pounds, on a gravel road in good condition, about 3,300 pounds; on a macadam road, from 2,000 to 5,000 pounds; and on a brick road, from 5,000 to 8,000 pounds. From these figures it appears that a horse on a good macadam road can do from three to five times as much work in a day as on a moderately muddy earth road.

One or two instances will show what this means in actual practice. Some years ago a farmer in Sullivan county, Tenn., had to haul barbed wire a distance of twenty-three miles. The most his two horse team could manage was a load of 700 pounds, and three days were necessary to make the round trip. The road has since been improved, and the same team now draws a ton without difficulty and makes the round trip in two days. Estimating the time of a man and team to be worth $3 a day, under the old conditions it cost $36 to haul a ton of the barbed wire. The same amount of wire can now be hauled the same distance at a cost of $2. In estimating the cost of hauling road engineers usually adopt as the unit the ton mile—that is to say, the cost of hauling one ton one mile. In the case described the cost per ton mile under the old conditions was $1.56 and under the new $0.26.

Another significant instance is reported from Crosby, Tex. For a mile out of town there was an excellent road which terminated, however, in a stretch of unimproved highway. A farmer who lived four miles out of town drove a team of two mules to the railroad station to get two tons of wire fencing. This he was able to haul without difficulty to the end of the shell road. There, however, he had to throw off 3,000 pounds of wire and hitch up two more mules to his wagon in order to haul the remaining 1,000 pounds of wire over the unimproved road to his farm. In order to carry all the wire he had to make three more trips. Altogether to transport this wire the four miles from the station to his house took him from 10 o'clock one morning until 11 o'clock the next morning. If the shell road had extended as far as his house he could have hauled with two mules instead of four the two tons of wire in two and one-half hours.

Because the farmer usually does his hauling himself and therefore does not have to pay cash wages for the time wasted on bad roads the expensiveness of the operation is not so obvious to him as it might be. There are times, however, when the loss that results from poor means of communication cannot be ignored. Sullivan county, Tenn., affords another instance of this. A farmer there some years ago had 100 bushels of Irish potatoes, which he intended to market in Bristol during the winter. On account of the condition of the roads, however, he put off going to town and stored the potatoes in the cellar. In the meantime the price of potatoes at Bristol rose as high as $1.40 a bushel. The roads, however, remained impassable and before the farmer could get his stock to market he found that it had all rotted in the cellar. While these potatoes were going to waste a few miles away, carloads of farm produce were being shipped in by rail to feed Bristol and the adjacent territory.

CHECK THE SUMMER ENEMIES OF POULTRY

The time of year is close at hand when two of the worst enemies of poultry will make their appearance—hot weather and vermin. No one can guarantee that the season's hatch will be saved, but there are precautions the use of which will help materially in saving the chicks. Proper feeding is essential, but many well fed fowls succumb to filth and vermin.

The colony house here shown is in use at the government poultry farm at Beltsville, Md. The wire screened windows admit both light and air and at the same time keep out poultry enemies. The swinging shutter may be raised in good weather and is also provided with wire screens.

Though cleanliness should always be practiced, the warmer the weather the greater the need for thoroughness in this particular. The houses should be cleaned and disinfected often enough to keep the presence of disturbers at the minimum. Other conditions being equal, a clean, well ventilated chicken house will do much toward promoting health in the flock.

The drinking pans or troughs should also receive frequent and thorough attention. It is not enough to rinse them daily with cold water. They should be scoured and scalded. The generous use of soda in the scalding water will be very effective.

The use of air slaked lime on the floor of the house after cleaning will act as a germicide, give the place a clean, healthful odor and discourage insect pests. Reliable lice paint on roosts and nesting boxes is also an effective health agent. The straw in the nests should be changed often and the fresh nests sprayed with a good disinfectant.

It goes without saying the chickens should be watched and at the first sign of the presence of disease or insects should be given careful attention that the danger may not be spread.

What's In A Name?

Sometimes There Is a Lot of Trouble

By F. A. MITCHEL

Caspar Kneiblitz's great-great-grandfather was a German. He was not a Prussian nor a warrior, but a Hanoverian and a professor. Indeed, the old fellow was a bookworm, who, if a fly had attacked the tip of his nose, would have been too absorbed in his studies to have defended himself. And if the fly had succeeded in arresting his attention he would not have injured the intruder for the world. He would have opened a window and put it out.

His son, Caspar, was called to the chair of a university in France. Thenceforth the family became French. The men, of course, kept the German surname, but by the time the fourth Caspar Kneiblitz came this was all the German there was about them. Not one of them could speak a word of German, and the third Kneiblitz had given his life for France in the war of 1870.

When Germany advanced into Belgium to seize Paris, Caspar Kneiblitz of the fourth generation, the hero of this story—if the word hero is a proper appellation—was twenty-one years old. He was only deterred from joining the colors by being so desperately in love with Hortense le Verrier that he was unable to tear himself away from her, though it must be admitted that if he had been able to master his own feelings sufficiently to leave her she would not have let him go.

For a Frenchman to have a German name accrued to his disadvantage as soon as the war broke out. Caspar Kneiblitz was at last driven to part with his beloved Hortense on this account. When others had joined the colors and Caspar remained at home it was suspected that the reason he did not go to the war was because of German sympathies. When he came to know of this suspicion he was much pained. He told Hortense that he must not listen to the voice of love any longer and at once began to make preparations to go to the front.

Of course he met with great opposition. Hortense was sure that she would never see him again and that her life would be blighted. He tried to reassure her, but in vain. However, since the suspicions of his countrymen that he was loyal to a country he had never seen and of whose language he did not know a word had been aroused his resolution was taken.

In order to make the separation easier for his sweetheart he promised to write her a letter every day that it would be possible for him to write. Another thing she insisted on which would not likely be possible was that after every battle, if he came out alive, he telegraph her to that effect. Caspar fully realized the crowded conditions of the telegraph lines, especially immediately after a battle, and that they were under control of the government, but he had not the heart to make it known to the girl, thus denying her this crumb of comfort. However, not knowing what possibilities might arise, he drew up a cipher code by which he might add a few endearing words of information concerning himself.

It was decided by the lovers that they would be married before a separation that might last forever. The ceremony was performed privately with few persons present. Within a week after its conclusion Caspar departed for the front.

While Caspar's loyalty to France was not questioned by those who knew him personally, his name at once excited suspicion in strangers. He had scarcely broken away from the clinging Hortense and gained his regiment before he began to be looked upon as a possible German sympathizer, though why he should be in the French army if he was loyal to Germany was not explained. Truth is that many a man loyal to France or England who had German blood in his veins experienced a like suspicion.

Caspar joined the army as a private and would have been promoted had it not been for his German name. Several times he distinguished himself, and officers immediately above him having been killed off, there were vacancies. But when it came to a question of filling them and Caspar was proposed his name caused his rejection.

"What! Lieutenant Caspar Kneiblitz to command Frenchmen? Impossible!"

Of course Caspar knew nothing of this; he only knew that when vacancies occurred he was not promoted. It did not trouble him, for his heart was with his dear Hortense, and all he desired was that the war should be ended and he might return to her.

As luck would have it, Caspar found a friend, an operator in the military telegraph department. One day when he was feeling very homesick Caspar went to the office and asked his friend to send a dispatch for him. No fighting was going on at the time, and the telegraph was not very busy, so the friend told the lover that if he would leave his message with him he would endeavor to smuggle it through between messages for the government. Caspar left his message, which the operator put on file without looking at it and when a convenient time for sending it arrived took it up for the purpose.

He was surprised to see that it was in cipher. Not feeling at liberty to send a cipher message, the operator laid it aside. When Caspar came again to inquired if it had been sent and was told that it was held because it was in cipher Caspar looked so disappointed and begged so hard that it be put over the wires that his friend promised to do so, though he feared trouble would result. Caspar assured him that there was nothing in the dispatch that would be of the slightest injury to France, and this turned the scale.

M. Larralee, deputed to examine telegrams received in Paris, was sitting at his desk when an operator handed him Caspar's dispatch. The moment he read the name of the person to whom it was addressed and noticed that the message was in cipher his face assumed the expression of one who had unearthed an announcement to German sympathizers that Paris was about to be attacked by a hundred Zeppelins.

"Mille tonerres!" he exclaimed. "Has it come to this? Do the enemy send cipher messages to their spies in Paris over our telegraph lines? To Mme. Kneiblitz, 21 Rue Pomponier. Could there be better evidence that this message is intended for one of the horde of German spies in our midst, who are watching our every act?"

Taking up a telephone receiver, he called up the officer in charge of the military telegraph and informed him of the message, stating that he did not doubt that it had been surreptitiously sent in the expectation that it would be delivered by some one in the telegraph department who was working secretly in the German interest. Colonel Bombardier, the officer telephoned, directed that the dispatch be sent to him and, after receiving and examining it, called a council of war to decide what to do in the premises.

When the council assembled experts in interpreting cipher telegrams were introduced and began the work of translating it. This was not easy to do, for it consisted in certain sentences which doubtless had a meaning for the receiver. However, the experts, not daring to acknowledge that they could make nothing of it, gave a possible translation, admitting that they could not vouch for its correctness. The meaning they placed upon it was that it announced a meeting of the German spies in Paris to receive one high in the German secret service.

Meanwhile Hortense was arrested and taken to Colonel Bombardier's office, where she was kept in an anteroom awaiting the result of the work of the experts. In time she was called in to face an array of men who looked ready to send her to the gallows.

"Frau Kneiblitz," said the colonel, "do you speak French?"

"I don't speak any other language," was the meek reply.

"Do not try to deceive me. You are German, as your name indicates. A dispatch in cipher addressed to you has been intercepted. It is an announcement that an officer of high rank in the German secret service is coming to Paris to meet the spy corps in Paris."

This was said because if it were the true interpretation of the dispatch the young woman would likely collapse. She did no such thing. She simply looked at her accusers wonderingly.

"Who is Caspar?" asked the colonel severely.

"Monsieur, he is my husband. Has anything happened to him?" she asked, paling.

"You play your part well, but it will not serve."

"Have you a dispatch from him to me? Oh, give it to me!"

After a conference it was decided to read the dispatch aloud to her. The colonel began with the first sentence, "The weather is very fine," and asked her what it meant. She did not need the key to tell him; she knew it by heart.

"I am well," she replied.

The second sentence read was, "Yesterday it was hot."

Hortense, somewhat abashed, replied, "Sweetheart, I love you."

The members of the council looked at one another incredulously.

Again, "We are expecting cooler weather tomorrow."

"That means a thousand kisses," replied the bride, dropping her eyes to the floor.

"This climate is trying."

"I shall never see you again till France is victorious."

"The mud is very deep."

"Goodby, sweetheart. I shall love you forever."

Several of the men who had been impressed with Hortense's gentleness, honesty and, above all, that she was essentially French smiled. Colonel Bombardier's countenance assumed a chagrined expression. He stood with the dispatch in his hand wondering what next to do.

"Colonel," said one of the council, "you've struck what they call in America 'a nigger's nest.'"

"The case," said the colonel, maintaining an official tone, "will be better examined into by a woman. I shall send Mme. Kneiblitz to Mme. Leblanc, head of our woman's detective bureau, and if she reports favorably the prisoner will be discharged."

Mme. Leblanc, instead of assuming the pomposity of the officers, began by soothing the poor little bride and soon discerned that she was wrapped up in her husband and had no other concern. Hortense produced the cipher code, and Mme. Leblanc saw that every sentence in it was nothing more than a love message. Then she reported to Colonel Bombardier, who pigeonholed the matter.

When Hortense wrote an account of the affair Caspar Kneiblitz applied to his superior to be entered on the army roster as Charles Nightingale.

Keeping Ahead.

It was an American business firm who some forty-three years ago showed the world how to perfect the medicinal properties of cod liver oil and make it pleasant to take which immediately popularized cod liver oil throughout the whole world.

Not content with this great success, however, Scott & Bowne have continued to evolve methods and machinery to keep Scott's Emulsion finer, purer and richer than the imitations which patterned after their plans, and today every precaution that human ingenuity can devise is employed to keep Scott's Emulsion the finest and purest medicinal food in the world.

The refining of raw cod liver oil as practiced with the crude equipments available along the Norwegian coast has never squared with the ideals of Scott & Bowne and they have just completed a spacious refining plant adjoining their laboratories in Bloomfield, N. J., which is refrigerated to the climate of Norway and equipped with unusual sanitary devices which will forever insure a supreme quality of cod liver oil in every bottle of Scott's Emulsion and place it above and beyond all commercial substitutes which may contain the usual suspicious or adulterated oils.

CHAPTER VI.

My Man O'Mara.

FOR a week and more Caleb Hunter scoured the surrounding country. He whipped over the hills in every direction, half hopeful that he might overtake the boy who had gone in the night. But none of the farmers on the outlying roads had seen pass their way a little foot traveler such as he described, and after a time even that small hope died.

When Dexter Allison came over the next day, his face far more perturbed than Caleb had ever before seen it by the news which Barbara in tears had carried to him, together the two men searched for Steve, driving in silence through the country until they both realized that the search was useless. And at last, one day in early fall, Caleb started alone upon his errand into that stretch of timber to the north which the boy himself had vaguely designated as "up river."

He spent a week in the saddle before he located the cabin of the Jenkinses in an isolated clearing upon the main branch of the river. And even then, when he did locate the Jenkinses, it took hours of quiet argument before Caleb could convince those shy and suspicious people that his errand was an honest one. Eventually they did come to believe him. They led him afoot another half mile up the timber fringed stream to a log cabin set back in the balsams upon a needle carpeted knoll. And they stood and stared in stolid wonder at this portly man in riding breeches and leather puttees when he finally emerged from that small shack, Old Tom's tin box under his arm, and with lips working strangely pinned the door shut behind him.

Caleb left in the limp fingers of the head of the Jenkins' household a yellow tinted note of a denomination which they had not even known existed. He left them half doubting its genuineness until later when there came an opportunity to spend it. And Sarah was waiting at the door of the white place on the hill when Caleb wheeled into the yard at dusk two days later.

"You've found him!" she exclaimed as she glimpsed his face when he entered the hall.

Caleb shook his head, his heart aching at the hunger in her question.

"No, I haven't found him, Sarah," he said gently enough. "But I—I've found out who he is."

They forgot their supper that night. With heads close together they hung for hours over the ink smeared sheaf of papers which the tin box yielded up. Most of them were covered with a cramped and misspelled handwriting which they knew must be that of the one whom Steve had called "Old Tom." Some of them were hard to decipher, but their import was very, very clear.

There was one picture, a miniature of a girl, eager of face and wavy of hair. Her relationship to the boy was unmistakable. Sarah found that and wept over it silently, and while she wept Caleb sifted out the remaining loose sheets.

"It's not hard to understand now, is it?" he said. "It's pretty plain now why he had to go. And we, Sarah—we who were going to 'make something of him'—why, we should have known absolutely without this evidence. They laughed at him, they made fun of him, and there isn't any better blood than flows in that boy's veins! He was Stephen O'Mara's son, and no more brilliant barrister than O'Mara ever addressed a jury of a prisoner's peers and—and broke their very hearts with the simplicity of his pleading."

Sarah folded her thin hands over the woman's picture.

"I like his mother's face," she murmured faintly. "And I'm jealous of her, Cal! You don't have to remind me of the rest of it, either, for I recall it all. She died and he—he went all to pieces. They said at his death that he was destitute. And when he did follow her—across—they hunted everywhere, didn't they, and never found the boy? Didn't some of the newspapers argue that a servant—a gardener—had stolen him?"

Caleb nodded his head.

"Most of them ridiculed the suggestion, but it was true, just the same. That servant was Old Tom. And the only defense he makes is just one line or so in—in this." Caleb dropped a hand upon the half legible pages. "He says that he wasn't going to let civilization make of the boy's life the wreck which he, poor, queer, honest soul, thought it had made of his father's. And do you know, Sarah, do you know, I can't help but believe that this overzealous thing which the law would have prosecuted was the best thing he could have done? I'll take these things now and lock them in the safe for the boy until he comes back home!"

But Sarah Hunter kept the picture of Stephen O'Mara's mother separate from the rest; she took it upstairs with her when she went, white and tired faced, to bed. And it was Sarah's faith which outlasted the years which followed. She never weakened in her belief that some day the boy would come back—she and one other whose faith in his last boyish promise, phrased in bitterness, also endured. For during the next five years there was not a summer which brought Allison into the hills but what the first question of his daughter Barbara, motherless now herself, was of Steve.

"Has—has Stephen come back?" she asked invariably.

At first the query was marked by nothing more than a child's naive eagerness, and later, when it was brought up in a casual, by the way fashion, it was, nevertheless, tinged with hope. Five years lengthened into ten, and still Steve did not come. But whenever Barbara asked that question Caleb remembered, as though it had happened only yesterday, that morning when she first appeared to the boy.

"I always told them that you would come back," she murmured.

Then came a morning when Stephen O'Mara did return. All winter and throughout the summer, too, the Hunter place had been closed until that day in late October. It had been a warm week—a week of such unseasonable humidity for the hills that Caleb, rising somewhat before his usual hour, had blamed his sleeplessness, as usual, upon the weather. He was glad to be home again that morning. Caleb was wondering if Barbara would be with her father on this trip. Barbara had, he knew, been two years on the continent, "finishing," Allison called it, always with a wry face and a gesture toward his wallet pocket. He was wondering as he came down the stairs if she would ask him again if—if—and then at the sight of a seated figure outside on the top step of the veranda he pulled up sharp in the doorway.

Caleb didn't have to wonder any longer.

The attitude of that figure before him was so like the picture which time had been unable to erase, so absolutely identical in everything save garb and size alone, that the man, recoiling a little, dragged one hand across his forehead as though he doubted his own eyes. But when he looked again it was still there, sitting chin in palm, small head under a rather weather beaten felt hat thrust slightly forward, gazing fixedly toward the stucco house beyond the shrubbery. And before Caleb could move, before he was more than half aware of the painful pulse in his throat, it all happened again just as it had happened years and years before.

Caleb heard voices in the adjoining grounds, and as he half turned in that direction Allison's bulky form, vivid in a far more vivid plaid, appeared in the hedge gap. While Caleb stared another figure flashed through ahead of him, laughter upon her lips, and paused a-tip-toe to wave a hand in greeting. And instantly, as they had ten years before, Barbara Allison's eyes swung in instant scrutiny of the one who was seated at Caleb's feet. She hesitated and recovered herself. But when with quite dignified deliberation she finally came forward to pass that motionless figure upon the steps every pulse in her body was beating consciousness of his nearness. And yet at that when she paused at Caleb's side and bobbed her head with a characteristic impetuosity which she had never lost she seemed completely oblivious to the presence of any one save Caleb and herself.

"Good morning, Uncle Cal," she murmured very demurely.

Then the man upon the steps moved. He rose and turned and swept his rather weather beaten hat from his head. His hair was still wavy, still chestnut in the shadows. And Caleb, though he could not force a word from his tightened throat, marveled how tall the boy had grown—how paradoxically broad of shoulder and slender of body he seemed to be.

Dexter Allison, coming up less airily across the lawn, surprised his daughter poised with one hand outstretched, red lips half open. He found her staring, velvet eyed and pink of face, at a tall figure in blue flannel and corduroy, and, although he had never seen him in all the months that the latter had been in his employ, Allison knew this must be the one in whose keeping lay, directly or indirectly, the success or failure of the biggest thing he had ever attempted in this north country—the man to whom he always referred, whenever he boasted of his exploits, as "my man O'Mara."

"I always told them that you would come back," she murmured then. "Just as you—you said you would."

The remark was barely loud enough for even Steve to hear, but hard upon its utterance she caught her breath in anger at herself for her own senseless confusion, which had led her into saying the one thing she least of all had wanted to voice. Even an inane remark concerning the weather would have been better than that girlish naivete which she felt seemed to force upon him, too, a recollection of the very letter of a promise which had, no doubt, long since become in his mind nothing but a quaint episode not untinged with absurdity.

"Hum-m-m!" puffed Allison. "Hum-m-m!" He spoke directly to Stephen O'Mara, who half turned his head at the first heavily facetious syllable. "So you did get my message, eh? I rather thought that it wouldn't reach you up river until today." An ample smile embraced the tall figure in riverman's garb and his own daughter's crimson countenance—a most meaningful smile of roguery. "Well, from what I've heard," he stated, "and what I've • • • seen, I should say that you are my man O'Mara. Mr. Elliott himself has informed me that your quite spectacular success in one or two vital campaigns has been entirely due to the fact that you are an—er—opportunist! I agree with Mr. Elliott absolutely—that is, if my first premise is correct."

Barbara's face had cooled a little in that moment since Steve's eyes had left her face. Now she forgot her confusion—forgot to be annoyed, even at her father's clumsy banter.

"Your man, O'Mara!" she exclaimed indignantly. "Your man! Why, he—he's my"— And that was as far as she went.

Her voice thinned into nothingness, but words were not necessary to tell either Caleb or Steve that she had been about to assert a prior claim which dated back years and years.

"I have always insisted to Mr. Elliott," Steve said, "that the solution of all the difficulties, which he chooses to view as gloriously romantic tilts with Destiny, depends one half upon luck and the other half on being on the ground personally when the—affair—starts." He half faced toward Allison. "I am O'Mara," he finished very briefly; "your man, O'Mara—if you happen to be the East Coast Development and Timber company."

There was at most no more than the barest suggestion of it in Steve's crisp question, but Caleb sensed immediately that Allison's placid appropriation of the blue flannel shirted one as his own particular property was not a mutually accepted status. Dexter, however, failed or chose to read nothing in the drawling question.

"I'm it," he agreed jovially—"that is, I and two or three others, including Mr. Elliott, our esteemed president. I've heard much of you, Mr. O'Mara. I've looked forward to this meeting," he added as he shook hands. "Now I want to tell you that I am proud to know you. And so you didn't get my message, after all?"

"I had to come down river yesterday," Steve explained. "Your telegram found me here, and I waited over until this morning, as you suggested."

"Surely—surely! I see—I see!" Allison emphasized his comprehension. "Not that it was anything of vital importance. I just wanted a short conference with you, that was all."

"Would you—would you mind finding Miss Sarah, Steve?" Caleb asked. "Will you tell her, please, that we are to be subjected to another—neighborly imposition?"

Allison shook his head and led the way to a chair. "I didn't know that you were acquainted with him, Cal. Have you known him long?"

"Um-m-m—yes!" Caleb weighed his reply. "Quite some time. I think I might say."

He shook with scarcely suppressed laughter, but Allison ignored his senseless mirth.

"I'd like to claim that boy as my own discovery," he avowed, "but I can't, not without fear of successful contradiction on Elliott's part. And in point of service it isn't fair to call him a boy, either, though I suppose both of us are old enough to be his father. He's Elliott's find. Elliott suggested him as the one man for this job when I consolidated with the Ainsley crowd and they took up the contract to move the reserve timber from Thirty Mile and the valleys above. Elliott knew of him, but I've been looking up his record pretty closely since he took hold in earnest."

"He's in his twenties, as near as I can make out, but he's come through on one of two jobs that might well make an old campaigner envious. He took a fortune in hard woods out of San Domingo for a Berlin concern; he was the only man on the St. Sebastian river job who said the construction was too light. He said it wouldn't stand when the ice began to move in the spring, and it didn't! Oh, he knows his business! But it wasn't his successes which caught Elliott's eye. It's the way he has failed a couple of times, fighting right back to the last ditch, and fighting and fighting, when all the rest had quit, that made me anxious to get a look at him. Perhaps there are older men who can outfigure him on loads and stresses, but as a field general he stands alone. He can handle men. And when it comes to meeting conditions just as they arise Elliott says he's a wonder. He can outguess dear old Mother Nature herself.

"That's why the East Coast company brought him up here to build its bit of road," he went on slowly. "They've got to move that Reserve company timber. They have a contract that'll break 'em—break us—if we fall down. And do you know, Cal, I—I can't help but believe that the thing is beyond the pale of possibility. I believed it six months ago, when Elliott and Ainsley and the rest of them were so keen for it, and I believe it still, even though I have seen Elliott's engineer and know what he has already accomplished. That track'll never go through on schedule—and that's why I'm up here for the winter. It's going to be a hot little race against time, with some millions for a purse. It'll break the East Coast company if he fails, and"—his voice became oddly intense—"and I tell you again that it—can't—be—done!"

Allison lay back in his chair and breathed deeply, slowly, and Miss Sarah appeared that moment in the doorway, pinker of cheek and more tremulous of lip than her brother had ever seen her before. She dropped Allison an old fashioned courtesy, which was an exceedingly frivolous performance for Sarah.

"Breakfast is served, Cal," she fairly chortled, "and there are two very hungry children inside."

EXCITING TIME ON BORDER DUTY

EXPERIENCED RECENTLY BY MEMBERS OF COMPANY 1

Mangy Burro Refuses to Halt When Command Is Given—Has Poor Opinion of Mexicans.

(BY HAROLD W. USHER)

EL PASO, Nov. 10.—Monday morning, November 6, began the first border guard for members of Co. I, and it proved very exciting. Members of Co. I were posted along the border fnr some five miles around the strip of land known as "No Man's Land," claimed neither by Mexico nor the United States.

Here during the night wierd experiencea took place. Eaeb man had two hours on and two hours off. Ray Bergman and Ervin Miner were walking along their post along about midnight, when they beard the sound of foot falls coming rapidly toward them. Tbey got out of sight and began calling "halt." Whatever it was coming did not stop when they called, and thoy were just getting ready to shoot their first Mexican, when a mangy little burro dasbed into sight. This of course put an end to their hope of becoming heroes.

Ray Barrick and Roderick Davis also had a hard time stopping a stump which they thought to be a man. All sorts of military maneuvers were employed in the prepnration for the capture of this stump before they discovered their mistake.

All sorts of people and objects were seen in imagination throughout the night, but the only fighting that took place was between two dogs on one of the outposts.

We returned to camp Tuesday completely tired out. The only ill effects suffered by members of the company seemed to center itself upon Gus Beuker, who had a very bad attack of indigestion, eaused by eating his baeon raw, in his endeavor to save the trouble of cooking it.

From my view point the Mexicans are the meekest and most lifeless people I ever met, and I think the sight of a gun in the hands of an American soldier is quite liable to be the cause of some of them dropping dead in their traeks.

DeWitt Patterson is now sporting three bars on his arm, being our new mess sargeant. He is filling the position in an admirable manner, and has the congratulations of the entire company in his promotion.

We all hope that President Wilson will have a change of heart since his re-election, nnd allow us to do his "watchful waiting" at home instead of on the border.

EXPLORES CLOSET WITH LIGHTED MATCH

Mrs. George Weaver Must Now Replenish Her Wardrobe.

While rummaging in a clothes closet last Friday morning, with a lighted match in her hand, Mrs. George Weaver accidentally set fire to the lining of a dress hanging there and before she hardly realized what had happened the closet was in a mass of flames. Her presence of mind saved the day and she was able to extinguish the fire and save all but five or six dresses before assistanee came.

While we deplore the loss of her wardrobe, we consider that Mrs. Weaver is to be congratulated on a very narrow escape from even greater loss, as the fire certainly had an execllent start.

NEW FURNITURE FOR COUNCIL CHAMBERS

All Night Sessions Now Made Easy for City Fathers.

Handsome new furniture has been purchased for the use of the city fathers and was today delivered to the council rooms by S. M. See & Son, through whom the order was filled. There are ten comfortable chairs, a director's table for the sittings of the council, a large flat top desk with ample drawers for the deputy clerk's use and a small table for the mayor.

The material is solid light oak upholstered in black leather, all pieces to match in mission style. On the whole, the city's new acquisition is a credit to it, and it is hoped that giving the erstwhile dingy council chamber the appearance of an up-to-date business office will servo to impress our summer visitors with the fact that this is not a backwoods jay town, and that our city officials must receive the same respect and consideration that the people's representatives should be accorded everywhere else.

JAIL BREAKING GETTING TO BE POPULAR

State Offers Reward for Two Much Wanted Prisoners.

More jailbreakers this week. Getting to be quite a popular fall sport among the state's star boarders.

Offer of reward for capture and detailed description came to local officials this week for Francis Losey and James Flips—both formerly of Grand Rapids, night trusties at the Michigan Reformatory, Ionia, who escaped over the wall on the night of November 10th at 10 o'clock.

Losey was a forger, sentenced in 1909 to serve 14 years and Flips was on the third year of a five year sentence for larceny.

With four of these fellows now at large, it may be that Ponto, the county's lop-eared canine sleuth, will be able to acquire some practical experience.

HOME TEAM LOSES TO T. C.

BUT SHOW MORE CLASS IN FIELD WORK

Trip Home By Auto a Climax to Streak of Bad Luck—Had Strenuous Time.

Charlevoix high school Braves played Traverse City nn their home grounds Saturday afternoon—score, 20 to 0, favor of Traverse. This is better than the Charlevoixites expected to do, however, against the fast, snappy outfit they were up against.

Our boys reached Traverse just about game time and went immediately onto the field. On the first kick-off, Charlevoix took the ball and by straight line plunges managed to push the elusive pigskin within ten yards of the Traverse goal where someone fumbled and back she went between Charlevoix posts for a touchdown. Traverse scored twice in the first quarter.

At the end of the first half, Charlevoix had the ball within a few yards of the enemy's goal, following Traverse City's third touchdown in the third quarter. It seemed that each time Charlevoix got the ball or neared the enemy's goal line, somebody fumbled or the whistle blew. "So near and yet so far."

Byers starred in this game and was good for from five to twenty five yard gains every time he got the ball. Huyck also distinguished himself and Duranee at quarter displayed great headwork.

Coming home Sunday the team metmet with a mishap which caused the class rooms Monday morning to be filled with an ntmosphere which might be described as slumberous. About half way out of Traverse the cars driven by Byers and Loomis broke down and their crews were forced to look for their supper at a wayside farm house.

Leo Butler, who stopped and attempted to help the unfortunates, did not get into Charlevoix until half past six. J. M. Saunders received a telephone message from one stranded party, about 20 miles the other side of Norwood and started out at half past five to bring them back in his Buick. He brought back the Byers crowd late in the evening but Loomis and his bunch did not get in until half past five Monday morning and they certainly looked pretty "rocky," according to report.

The Charlevoix team is working hard, though, and has hopes. Boyne City, since their victory over Cadillac—score six to naught, are the undisputed champions of northern Michigan.

BEARS WANT MICHIGAN BEANS

MAIL DECEIVING REPORTS CONCERNING ACREAGE

In Effort to Force Down Prevailing Price—Prosecution Liable to Follow.

East Lansing, Mich., Nov. 9.—The Michigan director of markets is advised of the distribution by persons interested in breaking the bean market, of circulars representing that the bean crop in Michigan is above normal. The director is in possession of one of a circular issued by a buying concern, which reads in part as follows: "Last year's crop of beans ran seven bushels per acre of good beans and we harvested 4,250,000 bushels. This year's crop, by the most conservative estimate, shows an increase of 25 per cent in acreage and the beans are threshing out 10 bushels per acre on an average. This would make the crop around 7,500,000 bushels."

Director of markets, James N. McBride, calls attention to the fact that the above statement is in direct contradiction to the federal and state crop reports which indicate a crop that is smaller than last season's by 500,000 bushels.

The November state crop report makes the bean acreage for Michigan 435,542 and it estimates the total yield at 2,920,339 bushels, with an average yield per acre of 6.71 bushels.

It is the opinion of the director that any private agency which desires to influence the market price of beans by adding 4,580,000 bushels to the duly published crop report, which is an amount that is greater than the total crop for 1915, is actuated by but one purpose, namely to deceive the producers and bring the farm price of beans down.

The director has been informed that the "shorts" on October delivery have had their contracts extended into November and are now endeavoring to break the bean market that they may have the chance to fill their October orders at a price much below that which represents the real value of the crop. It is urged in opposition to the arguments of the "shorts" that the constant advance in the price of food stuffs, together with the damage done to the California bean crop by rains need not give the Michigan bean grower concern as to his market. The director thinks the buyers who can buy foreign beans will do so when they can and without spending overmuch time in circularizing the trade concerning the subject, nor find it necessary to give misinformation as to the Michigan bean crop. The acre value of beans is not higher than other crops this season.

The market director states that copies of the above mentioned circulars will be laid before the federal authorities that they may determine if there has been any misuse of the mails.

DIED WHILE PREPARING FOR BREAKFAST

John Imel Was Well Known In Charlevoix and Vicinity.

The following article, taken from a Portland, Indiana paper, gives information regarding the recent sudden death of John Imel, who formerly lived on what is known as the Nowland farm, south of the city. The information comes as a surprise to the many people here who knew Mr. Imel, and who also express their sympathy to the bereaved members of the family:

"John Imel died suddenly Friday morning at six o'clock at his home on South Meridian street. Mr. Imel suffered two strokes of paralysis a week or ten days ago but recovered from the attack sufficiently to be about the house. Friday morning while preparing for breakfast he became suddenly ill and died within a few minutes.

"Funeral services will be held on Sunday afternoon at two o'clock at Boundary, in charge of Rev. S. A. Armstrong and burial will be made at Boundary."

NOT A QUITTER IN ALL GERMANY

COUNTRY IS DETERMINED AND DESPERATE

Herbert B. Swope Sees 70,000,000 People "With Their Backs Against Wall."

Seventy million people with their backs against the wall. Seventy million people fighting as one. Seventy million people and not a quitter among them.

That is one of the deep impressions I brought back with me from my visit to Germany, says Herbert Bayard Swope, in the Chicago Daily News. That is the reaction the German spirit produced in me. And that is why I think that if peace is dependent upon a forthright German defeat, then peace is still remote, for a nation unified by such a spirit as I saw in the empire is still far from being humbled.

Powerful as is the pressure under which they are standing, heavy as are the blows they receive, dark though their eventual prospects may be, the spirit of patriotism, of steadfastness, of courage, of defiance, that the Germans are showing, burns as brightly and as fiercely today, after more than two years of the war, as at the outset.

Determined and Desperate.

But beneath all these attributes there is to be seen and felt a certain though subtle, change in the fabric of the German spirit. From a certainty of victory, it has been inexorably pressed down to a fear of defeat. From the ambition of world dominance, it has changed to a struggle for existence. From the hope of conquest, it has shifted to a determination not to be conquered. Exaltation has given way to desperation, and the fear that Germany once sought to impose upon others is now being imposed by the others upon Germany.

When I was in Germany at the outbreak of the war, the word in every one's mouth was "siegen" (conquer). When I revisited the country, after two years, another word was being used—"durchhalten" (stick it out). I think the second motto is spoken with more heart than the first, for there were many in the empire who opposed a war of conquest, but now that conquest has been abandoned for existence, and the life of the nation is at stake, all feel the need of endurance heavy upon them. Their work lies plain before them, and they do not count the costs, for they feel that no price is too high to pay for national entity, and that is what the Germans believe they are fighting for.

That is why they are fighting so wonderfully; that is why their strength is renewed after each reverse; that is why there is no thought of temporizing; that is why, I was told by many that before Germany, the nation, died, every woman would have to be killed. In entire seriousness, I believe that if the worst came to the worst the German women would arm themselves and go into the trenches before they would see the victorious armies of the allies march into Berlin. And such a prospect is no impossibility—for the German spirit stops at nothing, and I heard such a plan seriously discussed.

EVELINE

We predicted Michigan would go dry. But after all such prophescies are easily made.

The snow storm has caught many farmers with potatoes and sugar beets still in the ground.

Ironton Grange was well represented at the Pomona meeting held at South Arm, November 11.

No more road building will be carried on this year. Camp has broken up and the boss gone on a hunting expedition.

The corn and vegetable contest to be held on Friday of this week hy the Ironton Grange at their hall merits your presence. If you haven't any produce to exhibit come and see your neighbor's prize corn and potatoes.

A Vocational Back.

A certain professor who was a remarkably fine, well built man, was staying at a village some time ago.

He happened to pass two men carting flour and overheard this conversation:

"Say, Bill, who's that?"

"That's the professor what's staying here," was Bill's reply. "They say as how he's very learned."

"What a spoilt man," rejoined the other. "I never in my life see'd such a back for a sack of flour."—London Tit-Bits.

THE TEST OF MERIT

Charlevoix People Are Given Convincing Proof.

No better test of any article can be made than the test of time and this is particularly true of a kidney medicine. Doan's Kidney Pills have stood this test and stood it well. What better proof of the merits of this remedy could you demand, than the statement of a Charlevoix resident who used it successfully and tells of lasting results.

Read the following:

Mrs. R. M. McKeel, 214 Mason St., Charlevoix, says: "I suffered for several months with kidney trouble. My kidneys gave me a great deal of annoyance. I was bloated quite badly and was subject to weak and lame back. Doan's Kidney Pills, procured from Metcalf's Drug Store, brought me relief." (Statement given October 26, 1911.)

On October 4, 1916, Mrs. McKeel said: "All that I have said in praise of Doan's Kidney Pills holds good today. Doan's Kidney Pills completely cured me of kidney trouble and the cure has lasted."

THE CANARY ISLANDS.

In Ancient Days They Were Thought to Form the Real Heaven.

You know, of course, that the Canary Islands are northwest of Africa and that they belong to Spain. You may happen to remember, too, that three very interesting things have been given to the world by that group of islands—Canary wine, the Canary dance and the lovely little yellow song bird that has a place in so many homes. To be sure, they are the Canary Islands, because that is where canary birds come from.

But hold! The horse is behind the cart. The birds got their name from the place of their nativity, and the group of islands took its name from the largest and most important member, Gran Canaria Island. Curiously enough, the name means "big dog" instead of "little bird."

There was a time when these islands were of far more interest and importance than they are now, a time when they called forth a special government edict. It was the senate of Carthage that passed a law forbidding the citizens to make those islands the objective point of their summer vacation.

From time immemorial the world had believed that somewhere beyond the pillars of Hercules there was a group of islands so beautiful, so replete with everything to make men and women happy, that they constituted the real heaven. They were called "Islands of the Blest." When the Carthaginian fleet returned from its first expedition to the Canary Islands there was danger that all the population of Carthage would emigrate to that realm of song birds and tempered sunshine; hence the edict.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

ODD LABOR SAVING DEVICE.

A Farmer's Ingenuity With a Clock and a Rat Trap.

On a farm in western New York it is frequently necessary to shut off a gasoline engine pump late at night. The pump is located more than a mile from the house, and the owner, after many weary midnight trips, decided to delegate the duty of shutting it off to a trusted family alarm clock.

The clock was first securely fastened to a support directly opposite and about a foot away from the switch of the engine. One end of a short piece of cord was attached to the switch and the other end tied firmly to the winding post on the back of the clock, which revolves as the alarm rings. The clock was set at the desired hour, but instead of ringing it wound up the cord on the revolving post, pulled open the switch and stopped the pump.

The arrangement worked perfectly except when the switch became clogged or jammed so that the mechanism of the clock was not sufficiently strong to pull it open. This difficulty was remedied by bringing into play an old fashioned spring rat trap. The pull of the clock is now used to spring the trap, and the strong throw of the trap spring shuts off the current without fail.

In another instance an alarm clock is used to open the small sliding door of a poultry house. In this case the clock winds up a string connected with a balanced weight. The pull of the string causes the weight to fall from its support and as it falls it pulls up the sliding door.—Country Gentleman.

Speedy and Easy Riding

There's little comfort in most low priced cars. You can't use their speeds. They jostle you—they ride roughly—they don't hold the road.

The $635 Overland is different. It is not only the speediest of low priced cars—

But you can use the full speed of its powerful motor when you need it.

It has long 42-inch, easy riding, shock absorbing cantilever rear springs. In addition the 75 B Overland is a longer car—104-inch wheelbase. And it has 4-inch tires.

Its smoothness and ease of riding at any speed would do justice to a much larger and heavier car.

Come in and let us demonstrate. That's the best kind of proof.

CHARLEVOIX HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

The members of tho high school had the rare treat of having Thomas Brooks Fletcher deliver a short talk in the high school assembly Friday afternoon. Afterwards Mr. Fletcher directed a short talk to the business men and ladies' clubs of Charlevoix.

With the first snow the "girls" are throwing snow balls on the school grounds. Attention, Mr. Aseltine!

The roller rink has been rented by the high school for athletic purposes, including basket ball, beginning December 1 and continuing for four months.

The 14th state annual boys' conference will be held in Lansing, December 1, 2, 3. This high school will be represented by Allen Arnold, John Walker and Robyn Merriam.

On Thursday evening the sophomores, accompanied by Miss Zipp and Mr. Beddow as chaperons, spent a pleasant evening at the Marion Center Grange hall. The members of the class met and were taken to the hall in Henrys. After a hearty supper the evening was spent in dancing.

Our senior president almost lost his heart a short time ago, but momentary reflection saved him from such folly. He recalled that he was a Walker and wouldn't know what to do with a Class Ford.

The adventures of the foot ball team on their trip to Traverse City would take a volume to tell. Suffice to say that Mr. Loomis had eight punctures and blowouts. Harold Byers has an entirely rebuilt car and Mr. Aseltine spent money as if he were getting it from home. The roads are in fine condition.

"Serves you right for playing foot ball on Sunday." Ask Mr. Loomis where that expression came from.

Messrs. Loomis and Aseltine sent their clothes out to be pressed Saturday night not anticipating the ordeal they were to go through the next day.

Messrs. Merriam and Cartier are applying poultices lately where they have been stung. It is rather difficult to doctor a broken heart, but they are making the attempt.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN HAPPENINGS

Events of Interest to Courier Readers

P. M. Does Good Deed.

A communication from Agent Will Martin, of the Pere Marquette railroad, at Petoskey, to the council of that city on Monday evening of last week, conveyed the information that the Pere Marquette railroad made no charge to the city for its services in operating a special train to Charlevoix to get a life boat and life savers the night of the big storm. The crew and boat were brought there to rescue Jay Lynch from the end of the breakwater.

The members of the train crew generously offered their services free if the road would make no charge to the city. While in the city recently on the annual inspection special Frank H. Alfred, general manager of the road, promised Agent Martin he would use his influence to have the charge canceled.

Evidence that he succeeded in securing this came in form of the communication to the council.

Charlevoix County Pioneer Dies.

Reuben Henry Walton, of Chandler township, Charlevoix county, died at the family apartments at 921 Petoskey street, Petoskey, Monday evening. He was 57 years, two months and one day old.

Mr. Walton was born in Clinton county, September 5, 1859, and came to northern Michigan with his parents when a small boy. He was married to Miss Nina Adell Cassada, July 3, 1887.

Besides the widow he leaves one daughter, Mrs. Bernie Adams, three grandchildren, four brothers and one sister. The funeral was held from their rooms at 10 o'clock Wednesday morning. Rev. Mr. Slaybaugh conducted the services. Burial in Greenwood.

Local Plants Increase Wages.

The past week many local plants have announced an increase in wages. This is the second time in the current year such steps have been taken and nearly every laborer in the city had been affected at one time or another, says the Boyne City Bee.

For the Michigan Tanning and Extract company this is the third time a wage increase had been voluntarily announced and each time the increased was quite substantial.

Employers realize to the fullest extent the high cost of living and are more than pleased to be able in any way to alleviate present conditions.

The Chemical company announce an increase in wages and also the Boyne City Lumber company.

Announcements from other plants will likely follow in the near future.

The price of stove wood had been increased in some of the local mills from $2.00 per load to $3.00 per load to the general public, but not to their own employes.

Weds Boyne City Man.

On Wednesday evening of last week at Boyne City, Miss Edna West, daughter of Mrs. Ben West, was united in marriage to Mr. Edwin Bradley. Rev. Hextemer, of Horton Bay, performed the ceremony.

They were attended by Miss Anna West, a twin sister of the bride, and Mr. Henry Bradley, a brother of the groom.

The home was tastily decorated in green foliage and pink and white carnations.

The bride wore a beautiful white silk messaline dress trimmed with deep shadow lace. The groom wore a suit of dark blue.

After the ceremony a most delicious supper was served. About 125 guests were present.

The bride was the recipient of many beautiful gifts.

The young couple will live on the old Ben West homestead. They have the best wishes of their many friends for a happy wedded life.

Made 4,000 Plunks.

Kelley Moran, a farmer who lives near Williamsburg, has found out by actual experience that it pays to play a waiting game in raising potatoes. Last spring he planted 19 acres to potatoes and while the tops made a splendid growth the tubers were delinquent in forming on the roots. September 5 he went into the field and pulled up a large number of hills and the largest tubers that he found were about the size of a pink pill so he decided that his crop was a failure and prepared to plow under the vines and put the land into wheat. His brother appeared on the scene before he started plowing and advised him to wait, which he reluctantly decided to do. He is now harvesting his crop, and the yield is averaging 175 bushels to the acre. At the current price his crop will bring him about $4,000 which he now considers a good price for carrying the tardy crop the two extra months.

County Roads Accepted By State.

The latter part of last week, says the Boyne City Bee, a representative of the state highway department came to this county for the purpose of inspecting roads built this season and for which application was made for state aid.

The commissioner after going over all the roads, expressed satisfaction of the manner in which all work was completed.

All roads were accepted without any strings or recommendations, which speaks well of the work being doing in that line in our country.

This of course includes the Horton Bay road, the Boyne Falls roads, both of which were not quite completed at the time of the visit.

Buried at Boyne Falls.

Mrs. Mary House, mother of Road Commissioner-elect Frank House, of Boyne Falls, and well known in Petoskey, died in Petoskey at 10 o'clock Thursday night. She was taken ill about five weeks ago and was taken to Petoskey four weeks ago. She was 68 years of age.

Mrs. House was a sister of Mrs. Elma Branch and Mrs. Ella Camp, of Petoskey, and an aunt of Judge of Probate E. E. Gilbert. In addition to these relatives, she leaves two sons, Frank House, of Boyne Falls; Lewis House, of Kalamazoo, and a sister, Mrs. Jennie Seager, of Birmingham, Michigan.

The body was taken to Boyne Falls, Saturday morning, and the funeral held from the Methodist church of that village.

SCHOOL COMMISSIONER'S NOTES

M. S. T. A. in Grand Rapids the best yet.

Just think, we have been blaming it all to the teachers because 50 per cent of the eighth graders fail to pass the eighth grade examinations and the assistant state superintendent says part of this is due to the poorly lighted school rooms from which the students come.

Study the school plant, teachers work it wisely and well. If the system is new you may need advice but keep the right track.

One of the state supervisors asks: Are you following the course of study or a plan original with yourself? Are you following a system using your own ways and means or just your own ways and means?

And the big plea was for proper and hygenic seating, for adequate ventilation and workable interiors.

A fine compliment was paid to one of our county teachers by the assistant state superintendent in his address to the county normal principals, when he stated that we had here a man who worked as a teacher preferring to teach but the one year in each place but to leave that school much better than he found it. He condemned all who took things as they found them and let well enough alone but found a notable exception to this in the teacher who is worth while.

Mr. Munson, deputy superintendent, called for specimens of penmanship from every county normal class last spring. I wonder if this would be a good plan to follow out in the rural schools.

Miss Kerry sends word that the Pleasant Valley school has received its prize money from the fair association and will buy a drinking fountain.

Miss Johnson sends word that Deer Lake is sure going to have some fine new seats.

Miss Benson writes that the Miles school has raised $12 in a social and plan on a new desk for teacher with chair as well. Surely needed for there was neither in existance. I wonder, do little children ever get tired when their feet dangle five inches from the floor?

A little black cat brought an invitation to this office to attend a Hallowe'en social at the Mountain school, admission one cent. Sorry to have been attending the institute at that time.

If you had a basement furnace in your school house and it sent the same air up to the children reheated and rehashed 50 times each day, say, what would you do?

The home work idea will be studied by the commissioners of the state this winter and reported on at a later meeting for possible state wide adoption. A university professor gave a splendid paper on this subject which met with universal favor among the educators.

SPECIALTY FARMING

Seeing the price of all kinds of food advancing, the average man feels like offering much advice about the raising of these products. Of course such suggestions are apt to be worthless. Still it is admitted by most experts that farm methods of past years have been inefficient and unbusiness like. So the consumer may perhaps express an opinion about the general principles on which be thinks farming could be placed more on a business basis.

A hint in that direction is offered by a dispatch just published from Burlington, Vermont, telling how one man had made $8,000 raising cabbages on 12 acres of land. While a good many farmers are making handsome profits nowadays, it is not likely that many of them have cleaned up $8,000 in one year by raising cabbages. This man no doubt succeeded by specializing on this crop. He must have studied every authority on the raising of this vegetable, and talked with every man who could give him any practical information.

Many farmers fritter away their energy by doing too many different things. In most forms of production the man who wins out is the one who specializes. He produces few lines, but gets out a large amount of each line. In that way his help becomes experts on that proposition. When you double your production, you do not usually double the labor cost. But you should increase the skill with which the work is done. The expense account grows smaller per unit of production, and the results should become of better quality.

Of course in specialty farming, if there is a crop failure, it is more disastrous. But the specialty farmer should be better able to protect his crop from insect pests and the vicissitudes of weather.

The consumer's hat goes off to the farmer who can make a success in any kind of food raising. He performs a public service in a time of struggling with living costs.

13 MONTHS TO CONGRESS

The newly elected congress, unless called in extra session, does not meet until December, 1917. Almost every one will admit that this arrangement is anomalous, and contrary to all principles of successful business.

In private life, if you employ a new man you want him on the job at once. Holdovers cannot be expected to put much energy into their work. If you are taking on a new set of men or new ideas, you want to try them out as soon as possible. If the men and ideas are good you want the benefit in the least possible time, if they are futile, you want to know it as soon as possible.

The short session of congress immediately following election traditionally never does much but pass appropriation bills. Even where the same party is retained in power, there are a lot of members who are not to come back. They feel little enthusiasm for work. The session is perfunctory. Yet there is a host of big problems immediately demanding attention. Many meritorious propositions fail because congress cannot get around to them.

The present arrangement does not perhaps incur any great loss. Yet it is one of a number of unbusiness-like ways that tend to make the government less efficient than private business. But you could never make a political issue out of a proposition to have the new congress meet within a month after it was elected, as it ought to. There are no votes in such a proposal.

It all shows that issues have to appeal to the popular imagination in order to force themselves on the politicians. The latter are looking for a program that will make votes. But there is a growing number of people who appreciate direct businesslike methods. The man and the party that can remedy some minor defects like this will make itself popular with a lot of people who appreciate good systematic work.

IS IT A PRECEDENT?

One of the boldest acts of President Wilson in the recent campaign was the establishment of what was designated as "Wilson Day," October 28th. This was the first time in American history when any living man has had a day set apart for national celebration in his honor. It is a general rule not only in this country but in other republics that no public man shall be accorded such honors during his life time. No public monuments have ever been erected to living presidents, and only one president has had a day set apart in his honor after his death. In monarchies it is the custom to observe the birthdays of the rulers as special days for national celebration. Perhaps the designation of "Wilson Day" may be the beginning of some such movement in this country, but it is greatly to be doubted whether public opinion will support it.

EXPERIENCES OF C. H. S. FOOT BALL TEAM ON T. C. TRIP

Censured for Playing the Game On Sabbath Day—Troubles Would Fill a Book.

It is not very often that a high school the size of ours has a foot ball team so good that it has to take two-day trips to get games. However, ours is such a team. They started Saturday morning at 8, and the last of them returned Monday morning at 5. Three cars left Saturday morning with Harold Byers, Leo Butler and Coach Loomis driving. The two first ones got through all right, except that Byer's car had to pay a dollar to be hauled out of a clay sink hole about 30 miles out. These two cars arrived at Traverse City about 11 o'clock and ate dinner at "Sams Cafe." While there, a message was received from Mr. Loomis saying that they were stranded about 11 miles out with Hooker's car—had been having tire trouble all morning, and could not patch it up any more.

Butler and Byers went back after this load. In due time Leo came rolling in, but time passed and no Byers. So Mr. Aseltine went out with Leo to get them, and found them with a broken differential. They were taken in and fed, then got ready for the foot ball game. During the game, which is described elsewhere, Mr. Aseltine was out in the cold, cold world with two garage men, endeavoring to fix up the cars so we could come back that night. About eight o'clock that evening they came in with the cars, having put a shop differential in Mr. Byers' car. After telephoning to Mr. Craig all hands ate supper and those so disposed went to the dance and right here let it be said that the whole team enjoyed themselves and behaved as any well-bred group of young men will do. They played a clean game and enjoyed themselves in a wholesome way during their stay.

The next morning at nine o'clock, Butler started just behind Hooker's car, but had to come back after a suitcase. Starting out again, they passed Coach Loomis mending a blowout with Frank Weaver using the language that Mr. Loomis did not seem to know, or had forgotten. Arriving in Elk Rapids, Leo's party waited for the next bunch and were just ready to start back when they came in. It may be stated here that Mr. Loomis was undoubtedly the busiest man in the state during the trip. Altogether he had eight punctures and blowouts. At Elk Rapids he had to sign a check for 12 dinners as neither he nor Mr. Aseltine started out with enough cash to finance a series of accidents and repairs lasting two days. Then he left Elk Rapids a little ahead of Butler, who had a few minutes trouble with the magneto or timer, the only trouble he had in the trip.

About three miles out of the city, Leo caught up to the coach, stuck on a hill. They attached a rope and started out to see how much mud could be made to stick to Mr. Loomis' physiognomy, as the rope was short and he was trailing along right behind. He states as a definite fact that his eyes were covered an inch deep and he had to drive by dead reckoning. The rope broke several times and finally got so short that they had no room to tie, so they stopped and got a wire cable from a farmer. The going was too rough and Hooker's car refused to work at all, so they finally left it on a hill about ten rods back from the main road, as they had taken a detour to avoid a sink hole, and had not quite got back to the main road. Mr. Butler's car came on into town and Mr. Loomis went on a half mile and telephoned to Elk Rapids for a car from the garage. It was here that Mr. Loomis got his "bawling out." He started to explain the way in which we got into such a fix, and as soon as he mentioned foot ball, one woman said, "It serves you right. You ought not to be playing foot ball on Sunday." He endeavored to explain, but she said, "Well, you were doing something you ought not to do on Sunday."

Meanwhile the other car was being repaired back in Traverse City. It was promised to us at 12 o'clock, but it was 3:15 before we got it. The list of new parts which were put in that car would fill a book. The five people who were in this car took a private lesson in building Fords that forenoon. The garageman that fixed the car could swear longer at a stretch without repeating himself than any other mechanic in northern Michigan, and he improved on his old record that day.

Byers' car started at 3:15 and was working like a charm, when just a few miles out of Elk Rapids, it commenced to pound and it was discovered that something was wrong with the transmission. While investigating, a big Hudson went by, but would not stop when we honked. We were just a few rods from Kewadin so Byers went in to investigate. There is a small telephone central here and the operator informed Byers that two cars had gone by in the middle of the after noon, one towing the other, and they had broken down three miles farther on, and telephoned for a car. So Mr. Aseltine left this car and started to walk to the Loomis-Butler combination. He says it may have been only three miles on the level, but counting the ups and downs in the mud, it was at least five. He finally found the car and walked in and surprised Weaver, Huyck and John Hallett at Mitchell's. Mr. Loomis and Robert O'Neill had gone on to telephone. So our worthy principal walked half a mile farther in the slushy moonlight and met these two coming back and at the same place met Mr. Saunders and Mr. Butler, who had come out to look for their wandering boys, and had met Leo at Norwood, and then had come on for the Loomis gang.

The Hudson which had passed the Byers car was the one which had been called out by the men in Hooker's car, but on account of the car not being right at the road, he missed it and went on by to Torch Lake. Mr. Aseltine then called up Torch Lake and got Mr. Monteith of the Hudson Six to come back and fix up one of the incapacitated cars, so the whole team could get back in that and Mr. Saunder's car. Then afterwards it was decided that it would be better to leave the cars there and get Mr. Monteith to take us home, so Mr. Saunders went on back to Kewadin after the four that had been left there. He took them in and got back to Mitchell's at the same time that Mr. Monteith did from Torch Lake. As he had expected to fix up the cars instead of taking the fellows home, he had a load of people for Elk Rapids and had to go back there first. Mr. Saunder's car came on home with four of the men, and the others waited for Mr. Monteith—waited, and waited, and waited. Eventually, he came and took them at about 1:30, having been delayed by various things.

Then the last of the foot ball team started home, and all was well, except that they had to push up one hill, because the tire chains broke. Meanwhile in Mr. Saunders car, all had gone well, until Jack Supernaw's trained right ear discovered an unusual sound. A tire was flat. Then it took the better part of an hour to change a "three minute demountable rim," due to the contraction of the rim by cold. About four miles out from town another tube went down, but as there were no extra tubes the rest of the journey was made on a flat tire. This load of warriors got in at about 1:30, but the last survivors of the polar expedition did not stagger up the steps of his domicile until the golden sun was beautifying the eastern sky. But this beauty was not noticed by the prodigals. They were too sleepy. All honor to Mr. Loomis and his little army of travelers. Two of the players and Mr. Loomis himself were at school the next morning, haggard, but all there. It was also noticed that Mr. Aseltine's face seemed to be covered with a dark growth. Barber shops in Traverse City do not keep open Sunday.

Messrs. Loomis and Aseltine had their shoes shined twice and their clothes cleaned and pressed once while in Traverse City, not profiting by their experience of the day before. Jack Supernaw enjoyed himself immensely, except that he could not find a place where he could get a malted milk after one o'clock at night. His suitcase was lost once, but was relocated after backing up a little distance. Harold Cartier's suitcase was lost permanently, or at least it has not been discovered to date.

The bevy of pretty girls down at Traverse City threatened to disrupt our school, as two men have already asked to be excused to attend a dance there next Friday. As it is feared they might not return, it was not thought best to grant their request.

Messrs. Byers and Hooker left Monday after their cars, and it is to be hoped that by the time this goes to press they are back all safe and sound.

Taking it as a whole it was a more enjoyable experience to tell about afterward than it was to go through, although the effects of the unusual strain have now worn off.

When the Time Comes.

Man little knows what calamities are beyond his patience to bear till he tries them. As in ascending the heights of ambition, which look bright from below, every step we rise shows us some new and gloomy prospect of hidden disappointment, so in our descent from the summits of pleasure, though the vale of misery below may appear at first dark and gloomy, yet the busy mind, still attentive to its own amusement, finds as we descend something to flatter and to please. Still, as we approach, the darkest objects appear to brighten and the mortal eye becomes adapted to its gloomy situation. —Goldsmith.

Playing the Rests.

It is not every young student of music who is careful about playing the rests well. Indeed, a great many players seem to forget that the rests are just as much of the piece as is the punctuation in a sentence. Nowadays people do not put in so much punctuation as they used to do, but the pauses in the voice are there just the same and are readily understood by good readers and always regarded. The rests in music are like the pauses in reading that are needed to give expression to the sentences. If the player slights the rests or extends them too long the whole effect of the musical sentence is spoiled.

Obituary.

Mrs. Barney Herington was born in Allegan county, March 4, 1869. Was married to Barney Herington in 1888. Lived in Allegan, Michigan, five years. Later moved to Kalkaska, where they resided 17 years. Four years ago they moved to Charlevoix.

To this union five children were born, four of which are living.

In early life she became a Christian and was taken into the church of Christ.

She endured the many weeks of her suffering patiently and passed away at the Reycraft hospital at Petoskey, Thursday evening, November 3, at seven o'clock. Her body was brought to Charlevoix, Friday morning. Funeral held from her home Saturday morning at ten o'clock. Rev. L. C. Vinyard preached a very impressive sermon.

Mrs. Herington is survived by her husband, three daughters, one son, three brothers besides a large circle of friends to mourn her loss.

We loved her, yes, we loved her,
But angels loved her more;
And they have sweetly called her,
To yonder shining shore.

The golden gates were opened,
A gentle voice said "come;"
And with farewells unspoken,
She calmly entered home.

CHAPTER VII.
Harrigan, That's Me!

NEVER before had the air of that long, paneled room been so surcharged with half suppressed hilarity. At first her father merely scowled at Barbara's intermittent little gurgles, which refused to stay entirely pent up. He frowned at her seemingly inane interruptions of the technical discussion into which he had immediately plunged with the East Coast company's engineer until he could no longer ignore the smile which pulled at the lips of the latter, too, at every fresh attempt of the girl to swing the conversation into an utterly irrelevant channel. He looked around the table then and caught the gleam in Caleb's eyes. He took note of Miss Sarah's illuminated face and gave way to a burst of querulousness not all simulation.

"What is the joke?" he demanded in a voice that set them all to rocking in their chairs. "Let me in on it, let me laugh, too, if there is anything worth laughing at. Cal, you're growing old—old and feeble witted."

Barbara bobbed her head meekly. Her giggle, however, was shameless. Allison had had experience with his daughter's seeming meekness. Moreover, the working of Caleb's and Sarah's faces baffled him. He waited, fuming.

"Just before you and Uncle Cal came in we—we were talking about the weather," the girl gurgled. "Mr. O'Mara predicted it would rain soon, and I just wanted to ask him what made him think so."

It was very quiet for a moment. Steve sat, a little red of face himself, gazing across into the girl's starry eyes.

"Go ahead," she prompted him, with a gasp.

Then his lips began to curl until a smile overspread his face and half closed his eyes. He leaned back and raised obediently a quaintly solemn, quaintly boyish treble.

"I wa'n't guessin'," he averred soberly, "ner I wa'n't thinkin' it will. It'll jest be rainin' come sun up, and it'll be good fer till Wednesday for sure."

At the beginning of that quavering statement Dexter Allison's lips fell apart. They remained open long after Steve had finished. Once he started to rise, and then dropped back into his chair, dumfounded. There was no doubt concerning the success of his daughter's query. At last he got to his feet and padded around the table. With a hand on either of the boy's shoulders he turned that browned face up to his own.

"You," he murmured weakly. "You! And Elliott said that you could outguess dear old Mother Nature herself! Well, I—I'm blanked!"

They talked no more business at table that morning, and Allison found scant opportunity to make himself heard at all. Even the reticence which seemed a part of Steve's grave face and big body was swept aside before the tumult of questions that tumbled from Barbara's lips, promptly to be supplemented by Caleb whenever her breath gave out.

It was minutes before Allison could wedge in a single remark, longer than that before he stopped frowning to himself in a fashion which made Caleb remember that moment of inexplicable vehemence outside on the veranda. They had retrogressed as far as the "injine"—the "steam injine"—when Allison finally made himself heard.

"What I can't remember is just why you left us so suddenly. I know it was some sort of a rumpus, with Barbara in it—there's always a woman, of course—but I can't recall"—

He paused to ponder—paused and became aware immediately of Barbara's swift silence and Steve's hint of self consciousness. Then it all returned to him with a rush. He had his turn.

"Oh, but I do remember," he drawled. "Why, of course—of course! It was a matter of knight errantry and ladies fair! But who was it whose choice conflicted with your own?"

He cocked his head on one side, mock thoughtful; then he fell to pounding his knee and roared with laughter.

"Archie Wickersham!" he shouted. "Archie Wickersham—oh, Lord! I never really appreciated that melee until this minute. And you promised that you'd be back, didn't you, and—well, b'gad, here you are! Shake hands again, Steve. And, if I may be pardoned the idiom, allow me to assure you that it was some battle!"

If it did nothing else, Allison's ponderous raillery served one end. It removed any sentimental awkwardness which might have attached to the episode, and yet the girl rather resented its being so completely reduced to terms of farce comedy. When the men rose, after breakfast, to go down into the town, she, too, declared her intention of accompanying them, as though it were the expected thing. She crossed the lawn at Steve's side, ahead of her father and Caleb, with Miss Sarah watching from the door. Both men walked for a short time in silence, their eyes upon the slender figure in short skirt and wooly sweater beside the taller one in blue flannel before them. And, as usual, Allison was the first to speak.

"Now I know what you meant when you referred to that trip up the west branch, Cal," he said. "And you were right. It does take stuff to make that sort of gentleman. Isn't there anything more to tell me? I am truly interested, Cal."

So Caleb told him then of "Old Tom's" tin box. And while he was explaining the man and girl ahead, all in one breath, skipped back to that day before yesterday, now many years gone. There was a quality of camaraderie in the girl's half parted lips and eager impulsiveness of tongue that morning that was entirely boyish. But when Steve finally asked for Deverean—Garry Deverean, who had followed him to the hedge gap that day and laid one hand upon his bowed, shamed shoulder—the light went from Barbara's eyes. And Stephen O'Mara, who did not understand at first the quick hurt which entered them, stopped smiling too.

"I liked him," Steve said simply. "I've always remembered and liked him. Thinking of him and—and—has often kept me from being too lonely nights, when I was lonely enough."

"Do you remember a little girl who was at our place the summer you were here?" Barbara then asked. "A pale, red lipped, very shy little thing named Mary Graves?"

Stephen nodded.

"And do you remember how even then Garry seemed to care for her? He was always supercilious with the rest of us; he tormented us or ignored us entirely, but never her."

Again the inclination of the head.

"Well, he grew up just that way," Barbara went on, thoughtfully. "One never could tell what was behind his indifference or—or flippancies. He mocked at things, customs and courses of action, which we have come to accept and—and recognize. But he was always gentle with her, and kind, and—oh, I think reverend is the right word! Now, knowing Garry as I do—as you will when you see him again—the phrase may seem a strange one to apply to him. And yet it describes best his bearing toward Mary Graves two years ago."

She was walking more slowly now, without knowing it.

"He loved her with his whole soul, Mr. O'Mara, and she married another man, almost without a word of explanation to him. Nobody ever called Garry as a shining example, but he—that man whom Mary Graves married—had an unspeakable record! Her family made the match—the newspapers call it a union of America's fairest youth and powerful millions, don't they? Well, he had them—and she married him. And Garret Deverean dropped out of the world for a long time.

"It was a year before he came back. People had already begun to talk about the way his father had gone before him—he shot himself, Mr. O'Mara, when he became tired of waiting for Garry's mother to return—and when Garry reappeared they talked more. I never knew before that a change so terrible could take place in any one so much a man as I know Garry to be. It's not just his face and his rather dreadful silence. It's not the fact alone that he drinks too much and shows it pitifully. It's—oh, it's the pity that a brain so keen could so deliberately commit suicide.

"They've begun to drop him, Mr. O'Mara, and you know what that means. But I'll always care for him deeply. That's why I have asked him up this fall. Don't you think you could come down again Friday if you have to go back into the woods before then? I'm going to have a party for some week end skeats, a masque dance. Garry needs his friends now more than he ever did, and—and when you meet him will you—will you, please, not let him see that you notice how much he has changed?"

They found the conversation somehow less easy after that. Morrison had grown inconceivably in those elapsed years. It was no longer a river village. Morrison was a city now.

Once when a squatly huge, red headed, red shirted riverman with a week's red stubble upon his cheeks lurched out of a doorway ahead of them and stood snarling malevolently at O'Mara the girl shrank against her companion and clutched his arm. The red shirted one fell to singing after they had passed. A maudlin rendition of "Harrigan, That's Me," followed them long after they had rounded a corner. Steve looked down and smiled casually into Barbara's wide and startled eyes.

"That's a river boss," he explained, "enjoying what he considers a roaring good time. His name is Harrigan. He works on the Reserve company's cut, which we are to move in the spring, and whenever he has had a trifle more than enough he always sings that song. He's willing to fight, too, to prove that it was written especially for him!"

"He's not exactly a friend of yours, is he?" she said.

"Well, not exactly," Steve admitted. "Not when he is in that frame of mind."

"Or in any other," the girl persisted, and she glanced down at her hand, still lying upon the blue flannel sleeve. "Did you know that your arm grew as hard as iron for an instant? I never knew that any one's arm could grow as hard as that. And is that the way you always prepare to receive your—friends?"

Steve colored a little.

"Perhaps I'm overcautious," he replied. "But it has to be hard. It constitutes what one of my men, Joe Morgan, calls 'accident insurance.'"

Then her face lighted up again. The delighted bob of her head with which she greeted that name astonished the man.

"Do you—why, you must have heard of Joe!" he exclaimed.

"Joe Morgan," she laughed. "'Fat Joe,' isn't it? And of course I have heard of him. You don't realize it, but I know more about this East Coast work and—and the men who are doing it than I had any idea myself. Why, I'll wager that you never knew, yourself, that he once wrote in to the officials insisting that the entry of his name on the files be changed from 'Joe Morgan, cook,' to 'Joseph Morgan, assistant to Chief O'Mara!'"

Steve's chuckle of appreciation was answer enough.

"I want to know Joe, please! Can't I meet him, Mr. O'Mara?"

But the question was unnecessary. Joe Morgan—Fat Joe to the river front and the construction squad—was already hustling in their direction, even before Steve, with that slow smile tugging at his lips, had finished assuring her that it was never necessary to summon Joe into the presence of an attractive member of the opposite sex. He came without being called.

"Morning, chief," Fat Joe saluted, in that thin and reedy tenor which none but fat men have.

Steve managed the presentation with extreme punctility and left them. When he returned, almost an hour later, he heard them both laughing long before he came into view, and on the way back up the hill the girl detailed for him much of her conversation with Fat Joe.

"Why should there be any—any element of personal danger in this work you are doing, Mr. O'Mara?" she finally asked. "And did I do wrong in mentioning to Mr. Morgan how that man came out of that—place and glared so at you?"

His rejoinder should have been very reassuring.

"So Joe has been hinting at that mystery stuff again, has he? After listening to him one is compelled to believe that I run daily a veritable gauntlet of nameless perils."

Barbara stood, small fists buried in her sweater pockets, studying his smile of amusement.

"I shouldn't like to believe so," her voice was faintly diffident. "And you—you haven't accepted my invitation for Friday. May I expect you? I didn't tell you, but Archie—Archibald Wickersham—will be there, as well as Garry. So—so you won't be entirely unacquainted."

And then at those words his face changed. All in one fleet second, in spite of the whole morning's quick intimacy of mood and the spirit of companionship which to her had seemed a delightfully new yet time tried thing, Barbara found that she could not read an inch behind those grave gray eyes. She found his quiet countenance as unreadable as that of the utmost stranger might have been. And while she waited, not entirely certain how displeased she was at his deliberation, a blackest of black horses soared splendidly over a fence to the north and came cantering down the road. The rider, a tall, bareheaded girl, lifted her crop in salute as she caught sight of them.

"My friend, Miriam Burrell," the girl murmured in explanation to Steve, and something had gone from her voice and left it conventionally impersonal. "She's riding Ragtime, and isn't he a beauty—almost as much a beauty as she is herself?"

The horse came on, to be reined up at last directly in front of the two at the roadside. Stephen O'Mara met for a moment the level, measuring glance of his rider before Miriam Burrell turned to Barbara.

"I've enjoyed exceedingly our morning canter, Bobs," her alto voice drawled.

Then, before Barbara could reply, she threw one booted leg from the stirrup and dismounted. With the reins looped over her elbow she faced the man in blue flannel and corduroy, a tall, lithe figure with coppery red hair and whitest skin and doubly vivid lips.

"You're Stephen O'Mara," she said. "You're Stephen O'Mara, for a thousand!"

"I've just asked Mr. O'Mara to come to my dance, Miriam," Barbara said, "and how did you know him, pray? I've asked him, but he is unflatteringly long in accepting."

"Know him?" Miriam echoed. "Know him! Oh, Mr. O'Mara and I have met before. I think before the fall of the Roman empire, wasn't it, Mr. O'Mara? Weren't they dragging me in at the wheel of a chariot one afternoon when you were dealing out a gold piece to each of your legionaries?"

She laughed dryly, and Barbara felt smaller and more forlorn and lonelier still.

"No doubt Mr. O'Mara hasn't time to be flattering, Bobs," she commented. "But you will have time to come Friday for a little while, won't you?" she asked.

Steve glanced down at the hand which still felt the pressure of her buckskin clad fingers.

"I have to work day and night some weeks when things break badly," Steve told her simply. "If I can," and he turned to Barbara—"If I can I want to come."

Miriam nodded her head with brisk duality.

"If you can," she agreed. "Barbara no doubt has been telling you about Garret Deverean, hasn't she? Yes, come if you can. I have heard, Mr. O'Mara, that you have once or twice fought your way out of the dark when everybody else had lost hope. I want an opportunity to talk with a specialist in such campaigns."

Stephen O'Mara had read a meaning in the words of that contained, often abrupt, straightly tall girl of which Barbara Allison had not even dreamed. He stood watching them when they turned up the driveway, the horse ragtime muzzling the woolly white sweater and following like a dog. But he wasn't thinking of Miriam Burrell or of Garry Deverean. He was wondering about Archie Wickersham—the Hon. Archie—thinking about that funny brawl of years before, which had not been so funny after all, wondering if—

Late that night, before she slept, Barbara asked Miriam this question, "Should I have told Mr. O'Mara that my engagement to Archibald Wickersham was to be announced at the party?"

"Why should you have?" Miriam crisply replied.

GAINED NINE POUNDS ON FIRST BOTTLE OF TANLAC, THE WINNER

It is not what people say about Tanlac that counts so much, it is the actual facts that proves the efficiency of this new remedy, Tanlac. It has brightened many a home and caused pain and suffering to be banished from the fireside.

Mrs. Margaret M. Wheeler of 1111 S. Division Street, Grand Rapids, is one of those whose life has been cheered and brightened because of Tanlac. She says:

"I was so ill I was confined to my bed. My housework devolved upon my daughter and the household had to get along the best way they could as I simply was not able to crawl around and do my work.

"My trouble seemed to be mostly with my stomach and a general run-down condition. I could eat very little and even that little caused me great distress.

"I read about Tanlac in the papers first and then a friend who came to call, Mr. Cole, had taken Tanlac and was delighted with the relief it afforded him, he told me by all means to try it.

"Well, do you know, I gained nine pounds on the very first bottle and in three days after I started to take Tanlac I was up out of bed and working around the house. I took two bottles during the hot weather and it made me feel better than I had in years.

"My appetite is splendid and I feel well and strong as can be.

"My daughter has been complaining of feeling dragged out, so I am going to give Tanlac to her because it did me so much good I am sure it is what she needs. I think Tanlac is wonderful, and a winner."

Tanlac can be obtained here only at the store of B. A. Herman.

Tanlac can also be obtained at the following stores: W. A. Hyslop at Boyne City, F. J. Fessender at Central Lake.

VAN PELT'S TOURING DIARY

Rutland, Vermont,
Saturday, Sept. 30, 1916.

The week's touring has come to an end where we are in one of the places where I sold flour as a traveling salesman over 50 years ago. It's the same high license town it used to be. I guess it has always been so. A drunken man was going out the door as I was going in. This beats our town, because he could go to a place where it was probably publicly sold. Although this is one of the original "Maine liquor law states," I think there is more rum drunk here than in any I know of, unless it is Maine. This morning we rested, wrote postal cards and saw a little of Burlington. It is one of the prettiest towns in the state. After dinner we took a short drive of 70 miles to Rutland. It seemed to me that the clouds were never more beautiful, a sort of a dark lavender, the sky in the east showing the cold, gray steely autumn cast which enveloped the mountains on the east, contrasting with the bright clouds in the west with the edges cut clear and distinct, permitting the sun to cast its rays here and there on the mountains in the west. I cannot imagine why anyone should leave this part of the country for any other—Fred Meech, for instance. I passed his old home this afternoon and all along the road the views were beautiful. Whole Steine cattle—I mean not stein of beer—were grazing peacefully in the fields and gave us a quiet feeling for ourselves, and a wish for the same for fellow man.

It's Saturday night, and that means tub night. We have had a very pleasant day. The expense of a trip of this kind staggers me. Hotels on the American plan and from $4.00 to $5.00 per day. Gasoline, 25c. We average 15 miles per gallon of gas. We use the Goodyear tires—first only, when we can get them. With these, we have already reeled off 6,195 miles and one has the original air that we started with still in it. So far, in Vermont, we have had only gravel roads and we of Charlevoix county know that when new they are good. They use a scraper a good deal and keep the sides of the road smooth and the ruts filled. This can be done by frequent use and one man and a team can keep a long stretch in order—going from his home up one side and returning on the opposite side. In this country efficiency is the order of the day.

Trusting you are all as well and as happy as I am, I still remain a true and loyal member of the Charlevoix County Booster club.

Van Pelt's Story of Muldoon and Flannigan.

Muldoon was writing one day when Flannigan walked in and said, "Muldoon, what be yees doin?" Muldoon answered, "I am writin the names of the men I can lick." "Is me own name among the names of the men ye can lick?" "Share, and it is—why not?" "Well, I'll tell yees one thing, Molly, and that's not two, ye can't do it." "Can't I," said Muldoon. "No, ye can't." "Are yees shore of it?" "I am, d—d shure of it." "Well, then, I'll leave your name off." This pleased Flannigan very much and resulted in their both becoming good friends and afterwards they formed a copartnership and are now in the hotel business. "Mully" being pointed out to me, I said, "Mully, could you give us a bit to eat and drink?" and he replied, with his great mother Irish wit, "Shure, I can give yees a very little to ate, and a ——— devil of a lot to drink." Then I inquired the way to a place on the map called Burke. "How far is it to Burke?" "Oh, about nine miles down." I then asked how the devil did they get him down so far. "Oh, to h—l with yees, yees surely are a good bit Irish yourself—and we parted with a hearty goodbye and a handshake.

BREAD IMPROVER IS BIG AID IN REDUCING THE COST OF LIVING

Ho-Mayde Makes Deliciously Good Bread From Even Cheaper Grades of Flour.

"With the price of baker's bread increased, and no indications that former prices will prevail for months and perhaps years, thousands of women are making bread in their own kitchens in an effort to reduce the cost of living," said C. I. Chapin, general manager of the Ho-Mayde Products Co., of Detroit.

"And many of these women have found Ho-Mayde Bread Improver of great assistance in making bread because the wholesome product, when dissolved in the yeast, assures absolutely dependable results.

"The Bread Improver shortens the time of bread making and prevents failures. It makes larger, softer and whiter loaves and imparts a nut-like flavor to the bread.

"It is not necessary to set bread over night when Ho-Mayde is used. Bread set in the morning is out of the oven by noon, and by its use an extra loaf is made from the same materials.

"Hundreds of housewives have informed me that they have greatly reduced the cost of living by using Ho-Mayde, as they are assured light, nutritious loaves of excellent bread even when the cheaper grades of flour are used."

The Ho-Mayde Products Co., which is sending sample packages of the Bread Improver to all women, upon request, has received testimonial letters from hundreds of housewives, as well as editors of several women's magazines, highly indorsing Ho-Mayde. It is said that Ho-Mayde will play a prominent part in reviving bread making, which, for the average woman, is almost a lost art.

Attend the Demonstration of the HOT BLAST AIRTIGHT FLORENCE HEATER, THURSDAY, NOV. 23rd

This demonstration will be in charge of Mr. W. H. Hurt, a representative from the Florence factory.

He will explain to you how you can cut down one-third to one-half on your coal bills.

If your heater burns two scuttles of coal where a Florence Heater would need only one, then you are burning up real money—for the wasted fuel would soon pay back the cost of the Florence Heater and after that the saving would be yours.

The Question is—
ARE YOU WASTING FUEL?

MINE SIGNAL DEVICE.

New Apparatus Provides a Practically Foolproof Code.

The signal systems of mines have seen considerable improvement of recent years. The new, Admil English device is an apparatus for use in mines with audible and visual signals. It provides a practically foolproof code of signals for the hoists that convey men and materials in and out of the mines, writes an expert in the Engineering and Mining Journal.

The signals are sent in the following way: If a hoist signal is to be given from any mine level the miner moves the lever of his instrument around until the pointer is over the required signal—for instance, placing it over No. 6. This has the effect of placing the pointers of all the other instruments, the engine room excepted, upon signal No. 6. At the same time the acoustic signal is sounded at each point six times. When ready for the order to be carried out by the engineman the man at the surface passes it on to him by merely pressing a "carry out" push. This causes the signal No. 6 to be recorded on the dial of the engine house receiver and the electric horn or bell to sound six times, while the pointers on all the other instruments all come back to zero. The signal thus given remains on the engineer's instrument until a fresh signal comes in.

Each instrument is provided with an indicator to show the level from which the order is being sent in, and by a special contrivance it is impossible for a signal to be given from any other point than the one indicated. This renders mistakes or malicious interference impossible, and there can never be any doubt as to where each signal is sent from.

In case of passing danger another signal, differing in tone from the other alarms, can be given by pressing an emergency push, and this signal is sounded at the surface and in the engine room. The advantages claimed for the new device are simplest and quickest transmission from mine levels to surface, also the assurance that by a single pressure of a push the banksman transmits to the engineer only the signal given from below.

NEW MILLING SYSTEM.

It Marks a Great Advance in the Art of Cutting Metals.

Progress in the art of cutting metals has been a slow advance with occasional sudden, pronounced jumps, followed by the same slow advance. One such jump came in 1900 with the announcement of the development of high speed steel.

Another jump has just occurred, writes L. P. Alford in the American Machinist. A Cincinnati milling machine company has developed a system of milling that permits of cutter feeds and speeds some eight to twelve times higher than those in ordinary practice. Test cuts have been made in steel 0.2 carbon, 0.5 manganese, at a peripheral cutting speed of 800 feet per minute. Other cuts in the same material have been made at a feed of 112 inches (9 1-3 feet) per minute. The feature of the system is the supply and control of the lubricant, which is delivered in some ten times greater quantity than is ordinarily used. The cutter is in a flowing stream—hence "stream lubrication." Experts in machine shop practice who have seen these tests have unhesitatingly said that they foreshadow a tremendous advance in milling practice.

NEW MOTOR TRUCK WHEEL.

Constructed of Cast Steel and Combines Strength and Lightness.

The making of a cast steel truck wheel that will have both the strength and resiliency required for the severe service to which such vehicles are subjected is a difficult matter owing to the unavoidable weakness of castings of all kinds at the junction of the rim and spokes, says Popular Mechanics. This weakness is apparently overcome in a new type of wheel recently placed on the market. The rim of this wheel is of a channel section, while the spokes are hollow and have sides curved in such a way as to join the rim without a sudden change in direction. This wheel is somewhat lighter than a wood wheel of the same carrying capacity.

Resilvering an Old Mirror.

Clean the glass with powdered chalk, being careful not to scratch the glass. Dampen the chalk with a little alcohol and rub it dry with tissue paper. Make a liquid preparation by melting in a porcelain vessel one dram of lead, one dram of tin and one dram of bismuth. When these are melted together add ten drams of quicksilver before the mass cools. This will cool it sufficiently for use. Lay the glass flat, with the cleaned side up, and pour the liquid over it, completely covering the surface. Raise the glass to almost a perpendicular position and let the amalgam drain off quickly. When the coating has become perfectly hard and dry coat it with drop black ground in japan and then thinned with turpentine.

Eggs That Can't Be Found.

The eggs of some common birds of the present day have never been found. There is the robin snipe; its eggs have never been seen. An English zoologist kept a man going up and down the coast of Labrador for weeks purposely to get a robin snipe's egg, but it was in vain. The bird is known by thousands of people, but it breeds so far north and so remote from any civilization that no scientific observer can ever get to its nest ere the young are hatched and have taken to wing. The frigate bird that is so commonly seen at sea on the Pacific and off the West Indies is such a solitary bird and is so seldom seen in its nest during the hours of daylight that its egg is rare.

Farm and Garden

COWPEAS AS FORAGE CROP

Recommended by Kansas Station Where Alfalfa Cannot Be Grown.

Cowpeas are recommended as a forage crop for some portions of Kansas where alfalfa cannot be grown successfully and as a silage crop when sown with corn or sorghum. The value of cowpeas as a soil improvement crop is well known.

"Cowpeas are adapted to a wide range of soils," says Ralph Kenney, assistant professor of farm crops in the Kansas State Agricultural college. "They will grow on almost every Kansas type when supplied with the necessary amount of moisture and given good culture. Cowpeas are best adapted to open well drained soils of medium fertility, but will often grow on worn out soils without inoculation.

WELL GROWN COWPEA VINE.

They will grow on poorly prepared seed beds, but respond best to good cultural methods.

"When sown with corn or sorghum cowpeas make a high quality silage, but not so when sown alone. Such a mixture, however, is successful only on the best bottom lands of eastern Kansas. The yield of silage from corn or sorghum and cowpeas is about equal to corn alone. The silage from the mixture is much more nutritious than corn alone on account of the protein content of the cowpeas. When grown for this purpose the corn and cowpeas are mixed in equal portions by weight and drilled in rows the first week in June. The drill must be set to drill as fast as possible, and the mixture of corn and cowpeas must be stirred in the drill box frequently to prevent uneven planting. Cowpeas are also a profitable soiling crop."

Excellent hay may be obtained from cowpeas if properly handled, points out Mr. Kenney, but the difficulty of harvesting and curing the lower yield and the woody stem make it less valuable for hay than alfalfa.

Cowpeas should not be cut for hay until the first pods are ripe. If cut before this the plants will be watery and hard to cure. If cut later there will be a heavy loss of leaves, and the stems will be woody. If the cowpeas are wanted for seed they should not be cut until most of the pods are mature.

In Kansas cowpeas are an uncertain seed crop on account of weather conditions. Every farmer can usually raise enough seed, however, to supply his own needs. Six to ten bushels is an average seed crop. Cowpeas sell near $3 a bushel

Soil Improvement.

The soil is improved very materially as a result of growing legumes for hogs and feeding extra grains to the animals.

PLANT CORN RIGHT.

Good seed corn planted properly in a thoroughly prepared seed bed means a good start toward a big crop. This means that the seed should be carefully tested, the seed bed well prepared and the drill or planter plate properly selected so that the seed will be dropped evenly

If large kernels of different sizes are planted with a plate which has small holes occasional missing will result, causing a poor stand. The only way to be sure that the plate is right is to place some of the corn you expect to plant in the planter boxes, raise the planter from the ground till the wheels can be turned by hand and see that the right number of kernels drop regularly. Even with the best adjustment satisfactory results cannot be secured if kernels of very different sizes are mixed.

Discarding the nubs or butts and the tips helps to avoid this trouble, but much better results will be obtained if the corn grader has been used.—Missouri Station.

SWEET CORN PESTS.

The Cutworm.—This pest can be quickly controlled by the use of poison bran mash or by hand collecting. Use plenty of seed, so that there will be enough plants left after the cutworms have completed their injury.

The Earworm.—This pest is difficult to reach, but the turning of the soil in the fall or winter will reduce the number of moths which appear the next spring to lay eggs on the silks of the shooting corn. The planting of the corn early will often enable the gardener to mature an early crop before the severest work of the worms appears. Late corn always suffers more than early sweet corn.

These are the more important pests which the gardener will meet in his spring and summer work, though they do not include anything like all of the immense number of garden insects. Many other forms will be found attacking the crop mentioned above, as well as onions, celery, asparagus and other vegetables.

RAISE MORE GRAIN.

Practical Suggestions by Pennsylvania Official to Dairy Farmers.

With milk bringing practically the same price that it did fifteen years ago and butter costing on an average 30 cents a pound to produce on the farm under present conditions it is readily seen that the farmer who owns a herd of dairy cows, gets up at 4 o'clock in the morning to milk and has to haul it to his market or churn it into butter gets nothing out of his investment except what goes for the soil, says James Foust, dairy and food commissioner, in speaking of conditions in the state of Pennsylvania. These conditions are practically the same in many other states.

What the farmer must do is to assume modern farming methods and raise twice as much grain and feed to an acre as he does now and then raise more dairy cows to keep his farm productive.

The foreign farmer understands this, and by the production and use of fertilizers produces from two to two and one-half times as much of anything from the soil as the average American farmer. In 1911 statistics showed that Belgian farmers used 448 pounds to the acre, Germany 211 pounds, Great Britain 152 pounds and the United States 28 pounds. Yet that little twenty-eight pounds, adds Mr. Foust, meant the consumption of 6,800,970 tons in 1913, for which the American farmer paid $170,000,000, more than one-fourth of it going to foreign countries. The assumption of the commissioner is that by intelligent dairying and other stocking of the farm this money might nearly all have been kept at home, to say nothing of adding to the outflow of luscious milk.

Ordinary Whitewash.

This is made by slacking about ten pounds of quicklime with two gallons of water.

The lime is placed in a pail and the water poured over it, after which the pail is covered with an old piece of carpet or cloth and allowed to stand about an hour.

With an insufficient amount of water the lime is "scorched" and not converted into hydrate. On the other hand, too much water retards the slacking by lowering the heat. "Scorched" lime is generally lumpy and transparent, hence the use of the proper amount of water for slacking and after addition of water to bring it to a brush consistency.

Seed Corn Tester Made at Home.

The drawing shows a good seed corn tester that is easy to make and very convenient. Take a two inch plank, four feet long and one foot wide, and in it bore holes one inch in diameter and one-quarter inch deep. Make ten holes crosswise of the plank. This makes it unnecessary to number every hole. Place four grains from every ear in a hole until the tester is filled. Cover them with a cloth and place sawdust on top, moisten thoroughly and keep four or five days. It is best to have four inch boards nailed around the edge of the tester to hold the cloth in place. This will accommodate about three bushels.—George Gross in Missouri Ruralist.

Chicken Lice Preventive.

Lice are a great annoyance to sitting hens and are one of the worst enemies of young chicks. To prevent their getting a foothold dust the hen thoroughly with some good lice powder before she is placed on the nest and once a week thereafter while she is sitting. The nesting material should be kept clean, and if the eggs become dirty they should be washed with lukewarm water

Elderdown is one of the poorest conductors of heat, hence its use as a bed covering.

Which Do You Prefer?

It is important for reasons of health and practical economy for every housekeeper to ask herself this question:

"Do I prefer a pure baking powder like Royal, made of cream of tartar derived from grapes, or am I willing to use a baking powder made of alum or phosphate, both derived from mineral sources?"

The names of the ingredients printed on the label show whether the kind you are now using or any brand, new or old, that may be offered is a genuine cream of tartar powder, or merely a phosphate or alum compound.

Royal Baking Powder contains no alum nor phosphate.

Jacob's Ladder.

Among long staircases the world over none, it is safe to say, is so long or difficult of ascent as "Jacob's ladder." This remarkable flight contains more than 700 steps, all rising with the same lift in the same direction. The steps rise at an angle of exactly forty-five degrees. "Jacob's ladder" ascends a particularly steep hill at St. Heleus. The steps are naturally the most direct route to the summit of the hill and despite their great length are traversed daily by hundreds of wayfarers. There are said to be many persons who from long practice are able to ascend the steep stairway at a rapid pace without once stopping for breath.

The suburban service of the various railroads entering New York bring approximately 1,000,000 persons daily to business in Manhattan.

MAKING STATE ROADS SAFER

A bill authorizing the purchase of parcels of land at highway intersections now on the house calendar is of interest to all travelers on the state roads. Any reasonable plan for improving the corners is likely to have general approval. Real estate in the country towns, outside the villages, is inexpensive. The cost of eliminating right angle turns should not be excessive, and the gain in safety will be appreciable. Many serious accidents have occurred at these abrupt turns, particularly where the dangerous conditions were not revealed by lights. At such points the best remedy is in the relocation of the highway lines, and it may be said that immunity from danger is worth more than the price of a few square feet of unoccupied farm land.—Providence Journal.

THE HORSE WILL DISAPPEAR.

This Is Prediction by Kansas State Highway Engineer.

That within ten years the horse will practically disappear from the public highways of Kansas for both pleasure and business is the prediction by W. S. Gearhart, state highway engineer. The horse, he holds, cannot compete with either the auto or the motor truck any more than the old freighter with his ox team could with the iron horse driven by steam, and it really looks as though old Dobbin will soon have to stay home on the farm with the cows.

"These new methods of transportation require new and adequate systems of highway construction and maintenance," says Mr. Gearhart. "The system of earth roads which the counties and townships of Kansas built up and were maintaining during the last six years was probably the best and on the largest scale the world had ever seen, but the rains, snow and frost during the past year have given them the appearance now of European battlefields.

"Until recently many Kansans had begun to believe properly graded and constantly dragged earth roads would answer every purpose. However, it is now clearly evident that if the main roads, those highways radiating out from the market centers and connecting the cities, constituting about 10 to 15 per cent of the total road mileage, are to be maintained in the eastern third of the state as 365 day highways which will carry modern traffic at all seasons it will be necessary to surface them with more permanent material than puddled earth secured by dragging the roads while they are wet."

CONVICTS AS ROAD BUILDERS.

Warden Zimmer Reports Work of Illinois Men Excellent.

Fifty prisoners are working in and around the new epileptic colony in Illinois this spring in grading and road building.

Warden Zimmer of the state penitentiary in a recent letter to the national committee on prisons reports great success in convict road work in Illinois. The laws of that state require that townships desiring to secure the services of convicts for road work must make application and enter into a contract with the institution. No work can be done until such request has been made and contract entered into.

The success of the work, Warden Zimmer states, depends upon the selection of the men for the work. Five camps have already been worked in Illinois and all carried out without friction or trouble of any sort. The warden also emphasizes the importance of selecting officers for the camp who are capable of supervising such a camp and having charge of the prisoners in the camp.

The national committee on prisons agrees with Warden Zimmer that too much stress cannot be laid upon the selection of the men and the choice of officers. The committee has brought before the Society For Highway Engineering the opportunity for the road engineer in convict road work and the need that engineers be specially trained for this work. Upon the men in charge of convict camps there is heavy responsibility, but to the right man success is assured.

SURVEYING WITH AN AUTO.

Motor Truck More Economical Than Horse Drawn Vehicle.

C. V. Hodgson of the coast and geodetic survey, department of commerce, has recently left Washington for the southwestern part of the United States, where he will have charge of a party for the determination of the astronomic latitude of triangulation stations established by the coast and geodetic survey and the United States geological survey, between Barstow, Tex., and the Pacific ocean. Many of these stations are on mountains as much as 10,000 feet in height. The results of this work will be used principally for geodetic purposes—that is, the determination of the figure of the earth and the distribution of material in the earth's crust.

The means of transportation for this party will be a one and a half ton automobile truck which was used successfully on similar work between Denver, Colo., and the Canadian border in the season of 1913. A similar truck had been employed also in 1912 on the forty-ninth parallel boundary survey between the United States and Canada. The cost of the work during the season of 1913 is estimated as only one-half of what it would have been if horses and wagons had been used for transportation. The saving in the coming season is expected to be even greater, as the country to be traversed is arid or semiarid and the transportation of water and forage for stock would have been a difficult problem. It is expected that the work will continue until late in the autumn.

The conditions in which the truck was used were such as to require very frequent transportation of men and material between widely separated points and in a region remote from the ordinary means of communication.

In the experience with the truck in 1912 it was found that a field party and its equipment could cover easily from seventy-five to 100 miles in a day over indifferent roads, including stops for gasoline, supplies, etc., en route. The machine will haul this load anywhere that four horses can and in one-fourth the time. It is equipped with solid rubber tires, dual behind and with extra tanks for gasoline and water. The weight of the truck is about 6,100 pounds and the weight of the equipment of all kinds carried, but excluding the weight of the three passengers, is about 2,000 pounds, thus bringing the weight of the entire outfit to more than four tons. On the average one gallon of gasoline was used for every 5.2 miles and one gallon of oil for every sixty-one miles.

The chief limitation in the use of the truck for surveying work arises from its weight, but a lighter truck would answer in some classes of work. Green poles were carried to place in front of the dual tired rear wheels in passing through deep sand or mud and heavy planks were carried for re-enforcing the floorlug of weak bridges. For use in mud or sand the dual tire possesses a great advantage over the single tire, but on the deeply rutted prairie roads the duals were found to wedge and bind in the ruts, so that it was necessary to take to the prairie alongside the road. For a skid chain a heavy, close linked, rather flat chain about seventeen feet long was used. This was wound about six times round the rim and tires of each rear wheel and the ends fastened by heavy buckled straps by which the slack could be taken up.

SCALE IN BOILERS.

Temporary Hardness of Water May Be Eliminated by Heating.

It is needless to state that the accumulation of scale on boiler heating surfaces resists the transfer of heat and therefore acts to reduce the efficiency of steam production. Water contains two kinds of scale forming "hardness"—temporary and permanent. The temporary hardness consists principally of the carbonate of lime and magnesia and can be largely eliminated by raising the water to a temperature of about 190 degrees in an open vessel to allow the escape of carbonic acid gas. An open type of feed water heater with ample depositing and filtering arrangements is often the simplest solution. For neutralization of the permanent hardness, implying the presence of sulphates in the water, it is usual to resort to chemical purification.

Special apparatus are available which are capable of combining the two operations for both kinds of hardness. Permanent hardness may also be reduced by duplicating a part of the action of the boiler itself by the use of a closed purifier in which the feed water is subjected to a high temperature under pressure. These are questions involving chemical determination together with the best advice obtainable.—Engineering Magazine.

To Harden Wood Blocks.

Small blocks of wood can be hardened so that they will not split so easily when screws are inserted by boiling them in olive oil for ten minutes. The oil can be used again and again. If it is desired to waterproof the blocks after hardening them, they should be placed in melted paraffin and allowed to cool in the solution.

Preserving Paint In Open Cans.

To keep paint from drying out in an open can it is necessary to exclude the air from the oil. This can be done by procuring an airtight paper sack, which is tested by blowing into it. Set the can into the sack and tie it tightly with a cord. Mixed paint will be kept in a working state in this manner.

Kongo Tattooing.

In the Kongo colonies of Belgium both men and women are tattooed according to their status in society. A woman of high caste will have a design not unlike a zouave jacket worked upon her back, and it would seem that the native is as content with this mode of covering as if it were a substitute for clothing. By injecting the juice of certain herbs the scars left by the tattooing process retain a swollen appearance, giving the effect of bas-relief work.

H. P. PARMELEE CALLED BY DEATH LAST THURSDAY

Had Been In Poor Health for a Number of Yeers—Well Known In Nortbern Michigen.

H. P. Parmelee died at his homa in this city last Thursday morning at 5:45 a. m. Ho had been in poor health for a long time with troubles brought on by reason of his advanced age.

Mr. Parmelee was born in Cattaraugus county, New York, July 15, 1836. His father was a Free-Will Baptist minister. When he was four years old Mr. Parmelee's parents moved to Wisconsin, at that time little more than a wilderness, the family traveling in a prairie "schooner." In Wisconsin, Mr. Parmelee experienced all ths vicissitudes of frontier life. He started to school at the agc of five and walked four miles to and from the school house every day. In early manhood he came to Michigan, where he was engaged in the mercantile business for upwards of 36 yaara, in Reading, Hillsdale county, and in 1860, at the age of 24, married Miss Jsne Perry, of Woodstock, Ontario, Canada, a graduate of Hillsdale college, who survives him.

After his retirement from commercial life, he became connected wlth the New York Life Insurance company and was general agent for Michignn for several years and the company's most able solicitor ln this territory. In fact, he may be said to have been the pioneer influence in the state for the spread of this important and beneficent propoganda of protection. From 1880 to the present date he and his family havc resided in Charlevoix, where he built "Breezy Point," so long a familiar land mark in this town.

Mr. Parmelee was also a geologist of no mean nbility and at one time lectured frequently on this subject at the sessions of the Bayview Summer university. His private collection of geological specimens was large and ranked as one of the best in the atnte.

Besides his wife, Mr. Parmeleo leaves two sons, Linus, who resides ln Flint and Edmund, who is advertising manager of the San Diego Union, at San Diego, California. A third son, Hoyt, who conducted a printing business in Chicago, died very recently in that city.

The funeral was held from the Methodist church, at which the pastors of the three churches officiated. The interment was in the fumily plot at Brookside.

CRUSHED FINGERS IN ICE CRUSHER

Ray Hamilton Suffers Painful Injury to Right Hend.

Ray Hamilton was the victim of an exceedingly painful, if not serioua, aceident last Friday. In some way—just how Ray is not able to tell—ha caught the fingers of his right hand in the ice crusher at the Robert Beutel fish station, where he is working, and before he could extrieate lt, the revolving rollers crushed the frst joint of the middle finger, splitting the flesh to the bone.

Ho went immediately to Dr. King who dressed the wound properly, but in endeavoring to redress it himself Ray got some brine lnto it and ths result has given him several sleepless nights. He haa lost no time on the joh, however, having been at work every day since the acclident.

Had his hand been gloved, it is likely that he would have lost his arm in the machine.

SAYS LIVING EXPENSES ARE OUT OF SIGHT

Conditions in Flint Not Very Alluring—Rents Are Higb.

People hereabouts contemplating moving to Flint had better study tbe situation carefully, says Arthur L. Guild, in a letter recelved at this office last week. Mr. Gould is oa the ground and should be fairly well acquainted with ths situation. He sums up the situation as follows:

"Many people ask me to advise them as to working conditiona aad living expenses in Flint, and what the prospects are here for the winter. I wish to answer these questions through the Courier.

"Wages are from $2.50 per day upward. A house that chould be rented ln Charlevoix for from $10.00 to $12.00 per month will run from $25.00 to $35.00 per month here. There are plenty of chances to buy and build, and the cost of building will compare favorably with building expenses in Charlevoix.

"Some of the factories are turning off men at the present time, thus the employment offices are crowded with men looking for positions. My advise is to make a careful investigation bere or any other place in this vicinity before making too great a sacrifice of your present holdings."

ANOTHER BUMPER CROP REPORTED

BEANS BROUGHT FOURTEEN DOLLARS A BAG

Andrew Klooster Will Net Over $750 From Ten Acres Plented Past Season.

Every week the Courier representative comes into contact with some farmer or farmers who have bumper crops to report. News of this nature is eagerly looked for and we are glad to publish it. If you have had a bumper crop let us know about it. Give us an opportunity to let the outside world know that Charlovoix county is a fine placc to live and that crops can be produced here that will put some of the lower Michigan sections in the shade.

Andrew Klooster is that satisfied wlth his bean crop the past aeason that he wants others to know about it. During the past winter he cleared and broke 10 acres of land. This he planted to beans. Seven of the ten acres was good land, the three being on a west hill side. Off the 10 acres he threshed 54 bags of beans, seven nercs being a good crop and the hill side three acres less than half a crop.

Last week he sold to Ralph Davis, of Phelps, 25 bags of beans for which he received $350.00, averaging nbout $14.00 per bag. He still has 29 bags laid aside for future marketing. Mr. Klooster's land liea south of Barnard. He cleared the land, planted and harvested the crop without help.

This is but another illustration of whnt can be accomplished by a farmer who is not afrsid that the hoe hnndle will tickle his hand. It takes a lot of hustling to get along in this busy, bustling world, but men of Mr. Klooster's stamp will win out every time.

Who is next with a bumper crop?

Special Services et M. E. Church.

Next Sunday is to bo a big day ln the Methodist church. In the morning the pastor will preach on "The Thirsty Invited." In the evening, by special request, he will preach a sermon to young men over 12 years of age. Special music has heen prepnred for both services. Everyone is cordially invited to be present.

NETTEO $216.91 FOR HER SUMMER'S WORK

Margaret Stroud Receives Above Amount for Bean Crop.

Two bundred sixteen dollars and nlnety-one cents netted as the result of planting a half bushel of beans is a record hard to beat—and it rather staggers oae to bebeve lt. But nevertheless it ls a fact because the moaey is aow in the bank.

Margaret Stroud, the 15 year old daughter of E. E. Stroud, of Hayes township, was given a balf bushel of beans to plant, with the understanding that abe was to take the entire care of tha crop during the aeason. This she easily accomplished, besides doing considerable other work about tbe farm and in the house.

Friday her father marketed the crop, which netted Miss Margarct $216.91. We have been told that this sum is laid away as a fund for a college education. It is safe to say that if she is as fortunate in her investments in the future as during the past year, ahe will always reach the goal for which she strives.

CELEBRATED HER 80TH BIRTHDAY

ENORMOUS CAKE A FEATURE OF THE DAY

Mrs. S. M. See and Eighteen Old Friends end Neighbors Fittingly Observe the Day.

The home of Mrs. S. M. See on Dixon avenue waa tho scene of a memorable birthday party last Monday at which Mrs. See and 18 of her old friends and nsighbors celebrated the passing of her eightieth anniversary.

A novel feature of the affair waa the enormous cake of McCann Brothers skillful manufacture, the gift of her son, L. S. See. This cake bore across its entire top the words, "Mother, 80 Years." The edges of the cake were formed by five crescent shaped sections, each section displaying in frosted letters the initials of one of Mrs. See's five children. When the cake was served, each "child" was supposed to eat the section bearing his or her initials. Only two sections remaiaed to be sent away to the absent participants on the Pacific coast.

Each guest received a handsome souvenier of the occasion and tha hostess herself was the recipieat of many beautiful gifts in token of the affection and esteem with which sbe regarded by ber many friends. A bountiful dinner was served, which was followed by a program of music, the hostess herself singing a couple of songs which sha had learned when a girl, and her excellent rendition of them proved that she waa only 80 years younger, after all.

Captain Alanson Aldrich, the only persoa present who had known Mrs. See in her childhood days, was also the only mere man in the crowd. By the testimony of those present, we are assured that he thoroughly enjoyed himself and acted in a manner befitting to one so signally honored.

Mrs. See, still hale and hearty at ber advanced age, is a product of her own happy philosophy of keeping cheerful and serene under difficulties and letting tomorrow'a troubles take care of themselves, although, being one of Charlevoix'a earliest settlers, shc has experienced plenty of both. May sho have many more happy birthdays is our sincerest wish.

BAPTIST BROTHERHOOD BANQUET

HELD TUESDAY EVENING IN CHURCH CLUB ROOMS

Pastor Asks for Co-operation of Men—Churches, Lodges and Organizations to Help.

An oyster and chicken pie supper was held at the Baptist church club rooms last night under the auspices of the Boy Scouts and was a decided success. All who partook of this excellent menl declared it a credit to the organization and the good cooks who helped them.

After the supper the Rev. Mr. Vinyard made n strong plea for assistance in the work. He asked not so much for the contributions of those present as for their personal co-operation, pointing out that of 212 available men in the town, only about 30 were actively enlisted in any form of work looking towards the upbuilding of a better community life nnd, in particular, the amelioration of conditions among the boys and young men. He also pointed out that the Boy Scout movement was not to be considered as in any way especially connected with the particular denomination which he represents, but was an effort to save the boys, which every decent element in the community should aid in every way possible, as much by personal interest and endeavor as by contribution. Mr. Vinyard also drew attention to the inadequacy and unsuitability of the present club rooms and urged the erection of a special building, adapted to tho carrying out of this and kindred enterprises.

The Courier is heartily in sympathy with Mr. Vinyard in his unselfish and coursgeous efforts to make conditions better for our boys. Now, good people of Charlevoix, you who smote the whiskey traffic with so ruthless a hand at the recent election and who raise your volces so stridently in both public and private condemnation of our prevailing evils and community sore spots and who are so insistent in your calls upon city and county officials—mayor, city council and police force—in short, upon everyone but your own particular selves, to do their duty; now is a brilliant opportunity to show your colors and what you aro made of.

This is no time for carping criticism, narrow sectarianism, petty private or denomination jealousy, or for ringing the changes on the contemptible old saw about glass houses and atones. The boys of this town are not Methodist nor Congregational nor Baptist, nor Christian Science, nor Catholic boys—they are

31 ENTRIES IN CORN CONTEST

ENTRIES AS A RULE WERE VERY GOOD

Business Men of Charlevoix and East Jordan Attend In a Body —The Prize Winners.

In spite of unfavorsble weathor the corn and potato show at Ironton Grange hall, November 17, was well attended and much interest was aroused by the contests. Membors of the Charlevoix Commercial association attended in a body, coming up the lake by boat. R. O. Bisbea, of East Jordan, drove up through the storm and declared that the show was well worth coming to see.

There were 31 entries in the corn contest and 10 entries in the potato contest. The entries, as a rule, were very good. Many of the contestants, however, were boys aad girls with no experience in preparing exhibits for show. As tha judges explained the reasons for awarding the prizes as they did, these young farmers will be in a much better position to select prize-winning samples another year. Tha educational value of contests of this sort is the best reason for promoting and supporting them. Parents who took no part in this contest, nor encouraged their children to compete, missed a fine opportunity for interesting the boys and girls in ths world's biggest business—the big businesa of modern farming.

In the corn contest Breezy Point farm won first place in the yellow dent class with Minn. 13. Emil Nasson second with Reid's yellow dent. Mrs. Earl Clark won the special prize for the best single ear with a fine sample of early Rochester.

In the white dent class Edward Hammond won first place. Mary Weldy second. Oakley Saunders showed the best single ear.

Ole Lyngklip won first prize in the white cap dent class. Joe Courier took second place and also showed the best single ear.

In the pop corn class Willard Bird won first with white rice and Harold MacMulkin second. Lillas Flanders took first prize with black pop corn and Oral Lewis second.

In the potato contest, early varieties, Jerry Saunders took the first prize with early six weeks and George MacMulkin second with early White Rose.

With late varieties, russet class, Breezy Point farm won first place with Petoskey russets and Lillas Flanders second with same variety. In the white potatoes Edward Hammond easily won first prize with rural New Yorker No. 4 and Vaughan Orvis got second with Noxall.

The corn was judged by R. J. Holcomb, of East Jordan. Messrs. Joe Courier, John Nasson and Ole Lyngklip awarded the prizes on potatoes.

George Anderson is still under the care of Dr. Armstrong and has improved but very little.

Mrs. Phoebe B. Schaffer, of Eveline township, has returned after a few days visit with her sister, Mrs. Clayton Shellman, at Bellaire.

Mr. and Mrs. James Steinberg disposed of their live stock and farm implements at auction sale last Wednesday, which was well attended.

Many beet growers took advantage of the few days of sleighing by hauling beets to the cars. Many acres are still in ground and many others remaining to be topped.

The corn and vegetable exhibit held at the Ironton Grange hall last Friday was well attended by Eveline farmers and outsiders as well. To express it mildly it was a grand success.

CHARLEVOIX PEOPLE GET INSTANT ACTION

Those who have used it in Charlevoix are astonished at the INSTANT action of simple buckthorn bark, glycerine, etc., as mixed in Adler-i-ka. Because it acts on BOTH lower and upper bowel, ONE SPOONFUL Adler-i-ka relieves almost ANY CASE constipation, sour stomach or gas. It removes such surprising foul matter that a few doses often relieve or prevent appendicitis. A short treatment helps chronic stomach trouble.

SCHOOL COMMISSIONER'S NOTES

During the past ten days every report in the office has been checked over. It was discovered that almost every teacher in the county had reports complete to date.

Miss Hale, of Clarion, reports two in the primary room who have completed the year's required 500 credits in home work. Miss Groeaink, of Undine, reports one girl who has earned her required one thousand. Sure proof that it didn't need to be required in her case. Miss Ruth Stroud, the industrious girl, is in the eighth grade and has never been absent or tardy.

The large diplomas will be ready for distribution very soon now.

Noted in the Pleasant Valley items: The teacher, Miss Kerry, is serving warm food each noon. The children furnish this themselves and it is cooked at the school house, something different every day. Miss Kerry says that she had the help of the Grange in obtaining the use of an oilstove, has a small kitchen, covered table and one shelf for dishes. This is a splendid little plan in more ways than one, don't you think so?

Wilson No. 1, the German school, is putting $30 in library books. Miss Milton, teacher in Maple Grove, submitted a splendid list of books which they plan on buying for their library.

Mr. Coffey, of the state department, was in the county on business recently.

If children are slow in bringing in their home work reports it would probably be fair for all aliko to grant five extra credits to every child bringing the card back on the required day, and deduct one credit for every day behind time.

Ironton school was dismissed early on Friday, the 17th, to attend the corn exhibit at the Grange hall. The judges explained the points on which their decisions were based and the affair proved very educational for both young and younger.

Eveline No. 6 is remodeling the cloak rooms at the advice of the state department. Due to the kindness and careful supervision of the state department they will have the best possible results available under existing conditions.

The eighth grade reading test in May will be based on Tubal Cain. These books may be secured from D. A. Wright, state agent in Lansing for the Lucy A. Sloan texts, for ten cents per copy, one cent extra for postage. These texts contain music and directions for staging.

First county test of the year, the mid-year test in every rural school December 20th-21st. Questions based on the work as mapped out in the course of study.

A number of schools have prepared some splendid Thanksgiving songs and sing their praises in anthems of joy.

Is it rather late to tell that a number of schools in the county had the pupils go to the polls to learn how to vote and to inspire dry votes? This was entirely the idea of the school officers and teachers but word comes that Ironton had enough enthusiasm to last for a week afterwards. They tell of auto rides and treats, and then seriously speaking state that they are looking out for the future welfare of the state.

The Hallowe'en toe social, whatever that is, netted the Ironton school $14.26. We may rest assured that the spending of the proceeds will form a part of a definite plan for the future of the school.

The state secretary of the Anti-Tuberculosis society is calling on the help of the rural teachers in selling seals, offering buttons and emblems for champion salesman. The commissioner has taken the matter up with the county chairman, Mrs. McIntosh, of Boyne City, and it is understood that if a nurse is obtained for the county through the efforts of our young boys and girls, the nurse will also give lectures and do crusade work in the rural districts during the time which she spends in the county.

The Ironton Mothers' club has elected Mrs. Lottie Tumath as president, Mrs. Louise Saunders as vice president, Mrs. George McMulkin as secretary, and Mrs. C. J. T. Ogden as lecturer.

The address and demonstration work done by Mrs. Curtis, of New England, in Boyne City last Saturday was thoroughly practical. She not only taught two classes to illustrate the Aldine method but gave many practical pointers in general pedagogy. About 25 teachers gathered to hear the morning program and a number returned for the afternoon session.

School Life in World Film Feature.

A picture that makes a strong appeal to women and children is "Hearts of Men," based upon a story written by Charles K. Harris. This picture was originally entitled "School Bells."

Although there is a great deal of grown-up drama in this picture, interest will be seen in the juvenile part of the feature. The producer called upon the services of many pretty children, clever actors and actresses. In the school scenes, the loves and hatreds, the jealousies and the flirtations and the other incidents of juvenile life gave Mr. Peckroth the opportunity of making pretty and thrilling scenes. You get all the comedy, drama and pathos of a mixed school of pretty children.

The photoplay concerns itself with a feud of a couple of German immigrants, one of whom robbed the other across the Atlantic. It is by the agency of a small child of one of them that they are brought together to fight their battles over, but in the end the long-sundered friends are brought together by the little children who touch the "Hearts of Men."

Arthur Donaldson and Beulah Poynter are the hero and heroine of this picture and there are some very clever little children.

"Hearts of Men" will be shown at the Majestic theatre on Friday, November 24.

OLD SOLDIER BATTLES MOST SUCCESSFULLY

Tha Call of the Fife and the Drum, No More Urgent Than Nature's Warnings.

TAKES HEED OF SIGNALS

When Geo. W. Forbes, 402 Archer street, St. Joseph, marched away to join the colors, of which he was justly proud, at the call to arms, during the Civil War times, he did not have so long a struggle to contend with as he has had in recent years.

For ten years he has been battling with his stomach, and sometimes it has been doubtful which would prove the victor. The enemy did not consent to lay down its arms, until Tanlac, the conqueror of stomach worries and pain made an appearance. The Tanlac treatment soon routed the enemy, however, and Mr. Forbes tells the story thus:

First Pain May Mean Years of Suffering.

"I have lived in St. Joseph since the Civil War and am well known in all parts of the town.

"When I first noticed the pains and distress in my stomach after eating, some ten years ago, I thought they would soon leave me, —that they were only caused by a little indiscretion in my diet.

"When these symptoms grew worse instead of better as the years rolled along, I began to try first one line of attack then another. Up until the time I heard of the Tanlac treatment and decided to use it, I had very little encouragement.

"I had given up all hope of ever feeling well and enjoying life without a disgruntled feeling of helplessness. I felt as if the enemy had me in its power at last.

Pains Now All Gone.

"The first bottle of Tanlac relieved me and I began to have hope once more. The second began to make me feel like fighting again and now that I have taken five in all the pain and worries are entirely gone, the enemy is beaten at last after all these years of battle."

Mr. Forbes was advised by his brother in Bridgemen, Michigan, to take the treatment. Mr. Forbes has a brother located here in St. Joseph, once mayor of our town and now vice president of our local bank.

Tanlac can be obtained here only at the store of B. A. Herman.

Tanlac can also be obtained at the following stores: W. A. Hyslop at Boyne City, F. J. Fessender at Central Lake.

CHARLEVOIX HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

Notice! King Saunders got a hair cut.

Another social affair given hy the Junior class was the occasion of their moothly party in the high school. It was a great success, perhaps due to the fact that those marauders that are wont to disperse class partiss and eonsume the edibles, were strikingly absent.

The class were given the use of tbe domestic science room for the preparations of the refreshments and the effects of their previous instruetion in cooking was apparent in the results obtained.

The evening was spent in playing games, story telling and daneing and all anxiously await the time for the next Junior party.

Owing to the fact that none of the Seniors were notified concerning the Junior party none were on deck. Sleep, Charlie Howard, for nnother month.

No wonder there are so many dunces in the Senior class. Miss Horst declares that it is beeause they're growing old.

Miss Roberta Fergusion reports that no "Robyns" have been seen on River street for many the day. What? No, she means it.

Don't crab, Cartier, if you don't like your seat. Think of Jonah spending a whole week in a whale flat.

Compliments to our history instruetor, Hugh Chaffin. "I thought I knew a lot about history but I can't pass your examination.

The Latin four elass has increased so thnt a class at 4 o'elock is required.

The Charlevoix county Normal have cordially invited the Senior elass to a Thanksgiving dinner on Fridny next. The Seniors are engerly looking forwnrd to the event, and are planning on turning out in full force.

A foot ball supper is being planned by the girls of the upper classes. Although the team have not been successful the students wish to show them that they admire the pluek of the fellows, and are still with them.

Cheer up—only another week before Thanksgiving.

CANNOT JUSTIFY

Some of the Michigan daily and weekly newspapers which were dry editorially are trying to justify their action in accepting the wet advertising during the recent campaign. It is possible that The Courier looks at the question from a narrow point of view, but we cannot yiew it otherwise than unjustifiable for any newspaper, either wet or dry, to publish advertising that was sent out from the wet headquarters. The subject matter of the wet advertising was almost wholly bare falsehood; and where any truth was stated it was warped, perverted and distorted and by specious and sophistical reasoning was made to appear to be otherwise than as it was.

No newspaper publisher, either dry or wet, who wants to be honest with himself and his readers, will permit the use of his newspaper for the dissemination of falsehood. If the publishers who accepted the wet advertising did not know the barefaced falseness of it, they were unjustifiably ignorant. If they did know the character of it, and despite that knowledge permitted it to appear in their newspaper, they were dishonest with their readers—or, perhaps it would be more correct to say that they attempted to be dishonest with their readers. The results proved that the readers were not fooled.

A newspaper cannot be honest and permit dishonest advertising to appear in its columns any more than a merchant can be honest and sell dishonest goods.

It is just as absurd for a newspaper to try to justify dishonest advertising in its columns, on the plea that it is honest editorially, as it would be for a minister of the gospel to permit the walls of his church to he placarded with atheistic literature, and then plend in justification thnt he was prenching gospel truth from the pulpit.

There nre no two ways nbout it, gentlemen; you cnn't be honest and dishonest nt the same time. Isn't a lot more respect due the editor who is wet, and who says so frankly, than is due the editor who says he is dry—who knows that the liquor husiness is all bad and says so editorially—but who, for a price, will let his columns be used in a despicable attempt to delude the readers of the newspaper into believing that black is white.

Some newspapers hoast thut there is no connection between the editorial office and the business office. The newspaper editor or publisher that makes this claim fools neither himself nor the public. Either the business office rules the editorial office, or the editorial office rules the business office. It isn't hard to tell which is the controlling office in the case of the dry newspaper that carries wet advertising.

Michigan went dry—pretty handsomely, too, thank you—and now there nre a lot of these half-dry, half-wet newspapers that wish they hadn't done it and are trying to justify their position in the recent campaign by telling about how "fair" they were.

Bosh!

WHY SUGAR PRODUCERS PROSPER

The depnrtment of commerce bas issued a statement showing great activity in the sugar beet industry as evidenced by recent heavy importations of sugar beet seed which wo cannot successfully produce in this country. The figures show that In nino months of 1916, we imported 18,500,000 pounds of seed. It is worthy of note, however, that during the entire year 1915 when the sugar beet growers expected sugar to go on the free list as the Democratic congress had decreed thnt it should, we imported only 4,000,000 pounds. The European war, which shut Germany off from the market for her sugar, gavo us a market that revived the industry.

Thy most serious aspects of the high cost of living are still ahend of us. Our exports of wheat and flour have heen so heavy, in proportion to our domestic supply, that we had on November 1 a reserve estimated at only 88,000,000 hushels, whereas the usnal reserve supply is about 90,000,000 bushels. We shall have plenty to eat, but we shall pay well for it.

Busines men in New York city are complaining that they do not get their morning mail until 9:30. Since they must hold up their morning work and have part of their clerks and stenographers idle, they don't like the plan of administrative economy which saves a mail carrier's salary at their expense.

All through the campaign the Wilson publicity bureau studiously avoided any mention of the speeches Bryan was delivering in behalf of Wilson. Merely an effort to complete the process of knocking him into a cocked hat.

We have had a revival of the question. "What is the matter with Kansas."

It is astonishing what a large number of people want four years more of wishy-washy wabbling.

We are not yet through with the "aurrender" administration.

CHAPTER VIII.

"I Mean to Marry Him."

It turned much colder with nightfall on the day of the party. A sharp wind with the tang of autumn was blowing in off the river when Barbara, muffled from throat to ankle in a sapphire fur edged wrap, slipped in at the door of the Hunter home, having stolen away ostensibly to display to the inmates her costume. It was after the hour of 10, but the girl lingered a little after she had executed that mission.

"So you are—you," he murmured.

"We are very sorry that Mr. O'Mara could not come," she hesitated. "I had promised both Garry and Archie Wickersham that he would be down."

"We haven't heard from him since he went back into camp," Sarah answered. "He, no doubt, has been unable to get away."

Barbara Allison recrossed the lawn very slowly that night. She retraced her steps with head bent, the fall of her slippered feet muffled by the carpet of thick, unfrosted grass. Vaguely troubled, vaguely disturbed at herself, she was within arm's length of a dark figure in the hedge gap through which she had just come before she was aware of its presence. Stephen O'Mara, weather beaten hat in hand, was standing there in her path, peering steadily at the stucco and timber lodge alight from end to end like a huge and sprawling glowworm.

An insistent desire again to meet the Honorable Archibald Wickersham had led him to request Fat Joe to hook up the team that day at noon for the long drive down the river. With Steve himself handling the reins they had rolled the thirty miles at a speed which might have mildly surprised Fat Joe had he not been accustomed to putting two and two together to make six or eight or more. And Fat Joe's thin tenor was just drifting faintly off down the hill—a mournful rendition of "Home, Sweet Home"—when the girl stepped noiselessly forward and put a hand, feather light, upon the man's arm.

Again she felt the swift tensing of the flesh beneath; she fell back a step before the startling abruptness with which Steve whirled. She even threw up one small hand, as if to shield her face. And then, the cloak falling open at her throat, a slender, swaying figure in blue and shimmering white, she stood and flung a little laugh at him—a laugh a little unsteady, a bit tinged with mockery and as untroubled as the spirit of youth itself.

"Is that the way you always prepare to greet your friends?" she asked.

The man just stood and stared at her—stared much as if he mistrusted his own ears and eyes.

"Not all my friends," his slow voice drawled at last, but even the words were tinged with doubt. "Not all my friends," he said. Silently the man reached out and found the hand which had lain for a moment upon his arm.

"So you are—you," he murmured, when his fingers touched here. "I wasn't—just sure."

Suddenly unable to think quite clearly, Barbara wondered at the new pulse in her throat, which beat and beat until it seemed not easy even to speak.

"Then it—must be you too," she faltered. "I wasn't sure, either, even when I knew it must be. I'd begun to believe that you hadn't forgotten—that you didn't care to * * * Will you please say that you forgive me—please—for something over which I have been sorrier than you can know?"

His eyes clung to the velvety face of that slim girl decked as Cinderella in bits of transparent slippers and shimmering, star edged white, until even in spite of the gloom the girl recognized the change which had come creeping over his face. She saw it surge up in his eyes—the old undisguised wonder of the boy of ten years before, for which, until that instant, she had looked in vain—but it was a man's wonder of woman now, utter and absolute and all enveloping. She caught her breath then. She touched her lips with a dainty tongue as though they had gone dry of a sudden. Involuntarily she stepped toward him, that single pace which she had fallen away. And above the tumult of her own senses she heard herself trying to laugh and realized how unsteady the effort was.

"Then you do forgive me?" she breathed. "Do I—pass inspection? Do you like me—in my masquerade?"

"There was never need of a fairy godmother for you," he told her, his voice grave. "There was never need of a transforming miracle. You have been that always yourself. And you are not permitted to ask forgiveness from me nor pardon. Men do not admit that there can be need of that where they have worshiped as long as I have worshiped you. You knew I was coming. I've been coming ten years now. But you can never know either how long ten years can be."

The words were blurred as a far off echo in her ears. She started to speak, but all that she would have said caught in her throat and hurt her, and only her unsteady breath came from parted lips. But when at her inarticulate effort at speech he bent his head to her swiftly upflung face her whole slender body tightened at the rough contact of blue flannel against her cheek. Almost before they held her she struggled madly from the circle of his arms. White of face, white of lip, she broke away from him and darted through the gap in the hedge only to shrink back against him in panic the next instant before the black shape upon a blacker horse between her and the lights.

He was gazing in their direction—the man upon the horse. He was laughing softly. And when he thrust back the black cowl that hid his face and began to speak Stephen O'Mara recognized that terribly pale, terribly drawn face. Garry Devereau rocked a little in the saddle and waved a gracefully unsteady hand.

"Blessings, my children," he called to the two in the shadow, and his tongue was not thick, but only wavering. "My felicitations. And, e'en though I know not your identity, still I may sense your fond confusion. And yet why blush, dear unknowns? 'Tis in the air tonight. Even I myself have yielded to spirit of frivolity. Two hours ago I appeared masked in these dingy vestments as Love's Young Dream, but with me the mood has passed. Fellow romancers, you have witnessed a metamorphosis. You are now gazing upon the Wrath of God about to thunder forth upon a coal black charger. I merely paused to bid you haste inside lest you miss the crux of the evening. When I withdrew the Hon. Archie was already searching with bravely concealed distraction for the fair daughter of the house. The hour has struck. It's masks off—masks off from eyes and hearts."

He laughed again. White face whiter still against the background of his somber vestments, debonair and drunkenly insecure in the saddle, Garret Devereau tore out into the main road and thundered off into the night.

"Is that true?" Steve asked quietly.

She made no move to answer.

"Is that true?" his low and gentle voice commanded this time. "You still mean to—marry—him?"

"What I have done tonight I can never hope to explain," she answered, recovering herself. "I can only hope that some day I may cease to despise myself as utterly as you have taught me to at this minute. And since you choose to regard it now as your right to ask that question I'll answer it for you. I mean to marry him. I shall be proud to be his wife."

The light that streamed over her shoulder fell full upon his face. She saw the blood pour up, staining throat and cheek and brow, and then ebb away. She gave him time to answer, but he did not speak, and suddenly she knew what scene of another day he was remembering. Her eyes dropped to her imprisoned hand.

"You are detaining me," she said.

He released her immediately, and yet she did not move. And while she waited he turned and stooped and turned to her again. She stood like stone while he wrapped her fur edged sapphire cloak about her and fastened it close beneath her uptilted chin. He waited, bare of head, in the hedge gap until she had crossed the lawn to the house that lay a sprawling glowworm in the darkness. A tumult of voices leaped out to him when he opened the door—a lilting crash of syncopated melody. And then it was quiet again.

After a glimpse of his chief's eyes that night Fat Joe essayed not so much as one facetious protest against turning the fagged team homeward with scarcely any rest at all. He remained as quiet as that too quiet man beside him.

He fell to whistling later, and almost immediately his thin tenor was rolling ahead of them through the black alley between the pines, to continue in soulful reiteration until the construction camp clearing loomed up ahead. Suddenly Fat Joe tightened the reins above the fagged team; then he shot forward and laid the whip across their tired flanks as they cleared the breastwork of trees.

Steve's head was jerked backward by the abruptness of their first plunge, and then he saw what Fat Joe had seen a second before. High up on the hillside there was a light glowing from the windows of the shack which served the chief engineer of the East Coast job as office and domicile too. While Fat Joe told on the whip a man came hurtling past the outflung door, sprang to his feet and, running low to the ground, disappeared into the blackness of the brush. Joe swung the horses up in a galloping curve and with one catlike leap, incredibly light for a man of his clunky build, was down from the seat and crashing through the bushes on the trail of that fugitive whose noisy flight had already become a faint crackle in the distance.

Flame poured from Fat Joe's revolver. Two whiplike reports shattered the night quiet before Stephen O'Mara moved. Then he lifted himself heavily from the seat. Something nuzzled his shoulder while he stood listening to the diminishing tumult of the pursuit, and even before he turned he knew what it was. He paused a moment to stroke the soft nose of the black horse standing there with reins a-trail. It was Ragtime, wet with lather and caked with dust. But even then he was not prepared for the sight which met him when he entered the shack. Seconds must have passed while he stood staring from the threshold, for Fat Joe came puffing back from his fruitless chase in time to see him bend and lift a black robed, lifelessly limp body from the floor and stagger with it toward a bunk. Fat Joe's steady flow of profanity, oddly, double vicious in his thin, complaining voice, was checked short. He, too, stood and stared from the doorway—stood and lifted his nose and sniffed.

"Seems to be our night for callers," he remarked, with bad mildness, "and, say, this one's got a peach of a load."

Then Garry Devereau's head rolled over, ghastly loose and slack, and the plump one caught sight of a ragged gash in the senseless man's temple.

"So-o, that's it?" he droned, and his complaining voice was deadly again. "So that's it! But he wasn't so far gone that he couldn't put up a tidy little battle, was he? Funny about that, too, but I could always do my best little jobs of man handling when I was about half over myself."

His pale eyes swept the floor. He pounced forward and recovered a sheaf of blue prints from a corner.

"This, I take it," he muttered, "was what they was arguing about when we busted in. Steve, them's our bridge estimates—and there wa'n't no copies of 'em either. It wouldn't take us more'n two weeks to replace 'em neither—not more'n two precious, priceless weeks. I'm only hopin' now that when our other caller, who seems to want them more than we do, calls again, I'll be here myself to entertain him with ten or somethin'. I'd plumb hate to seem so inhospitable as not to be home, twice hand runnin', to visitors."

"Maybe that was a tidy little battle while it lasted," Fat Joe continued, "but it ain't deuce high alongside this fight we've got on our hands right now. For he's just as near over as I'd care to see a man, unless it was some one I'd a little prefer dead! It ain't that scratch on the head that's got him slippin', either." Joe paused and turned to address Garry Devereau's

"Blessings, my children," he called to the two in the shadow.

still white face itself. "You eat in an' hacked my game like a gentleman born," he said, "and now I'm a-goin' to play yourn, blue chips and white and yello'."

And while he talked he worked, for it was Fat Joe who gave the orders that night. He called for ammonia, for brandy, for a half dozen drugs from the camp hospital chest, and each of them Steve brought in an automatic fashion that finally penetrated even Fat Joe's professional pleasure in the struggle.

"Friend of yourn?" he asked in an interval while they rested.

"A friend," Steve repeated with a tightening of his jaws, and Joe knew what that tone meant.

Before daybreak there came an hour when Garry Devereau lifted himself upon one elbow and opened his eyes to stare half wildly, but very sanely, about the room. His gaze flitted wonderingly from wall to wall before it rested, fearfully fixed, upon Steve's brown face. Instantly he looked away, clinchingly, and met Fat Joe's voluminous grin—and looked back again, cunningly cautious. Finally he reached out a timid, blue veined, pitifully unsteady hand and plucked at Steve's blue flannel sleeve. And his words were an echo of those which Stephen O'Mara had heard before that night from other lips.

"Then you—are you," he framed the words laboriously. "I wasn't sure—even when I knew it must be."

And Garry Devereau tried to smile his slow smile of sophistry.

"Greetings, Sir Galahad!" he faltered. "And how are you, Steve—and who might your—fat friend be?"

NORTHERN MICHIGAN HAPPENINGS

Events of Interest to Courier Readers

Wife Deserter Located.

Henry E. Hill, the Harbor Springs manager of the Michigan State Telephone company, who recently deserted his family and eloped with Mrs. Mildred Bassett, was arrested on Monday morning of last week at Parkersburg, West Virginia, just across the Ohio river from Marietta, Ohio, where he has been working for several weeks. He is being held there for Emmet county officers.

A telegram from the captain of police at Parkersburg brought the information that Hill was in jail and will be held awaiting the arrival of Sheriff Purple, of Petoskey. Hill was arrested on a charge of wife desertion.

Sheriff Purple had Hill traced from Petoskey to Grand Rapids, Chicago, Detroit, Buffalo, Pittsburg, Merietta and Parkersburg. He and Mrs. Bassett were rooming at 602 Ann street, Parkersburg, but Hill was working at Marietta, across the river, at his trade as a telephone lineman.

The telegram from Parkersburg police did not state whether Mrs. Bassett was under arrest but it is supposed here that she has been for instructions from Sheriff Purple was to place both of them under arrest.

Sheriff Purple went to Lansing tonight for extradition papers from Governor Ferris to the governor of West Virginia. From Lansing he will go to Charleston, West Virginia, to heve the extradition of the prisoner or prisoners arranged for.

He will then go to Parkersburg and bring Hill and Mrs. Bassett beck to Petoskey.

Caught In Line Shaft.

Lawrence Overholt, employed at the Klise Lumber company planing mill at Petoskey, had his clothing torn off and received some injuries on Monday forenoon of last week when he was caught in a line shaft.

Mr. Overholt was working alone in that part of the mill and no one witnessed the accident. Apparently no bones were broken but Mr. Overholt received some severe bumps and bruises.

He was able to get up and walk out into another part of the mill where other men were working and tell of his accident.

Damaged By Fire.

Fire, water and smoke damaged the Knights of Columbus temple on Howard street, Petoskey, early Sunday morning of last week when the rear of the building caught fire from a blaze in the smoke house of the Herbert Hamill meat market, which occupies the first floor of the building.

The blaze was discovered by L. J. Pettengill at about 5:50 o'clock and had a good start at that time. The firemen worked for an hour before they had it entirely conquered.

The wooden platforms in the rear of the building were damaged and the rooms filled with smoke. Some damage was also caused on the inside of the building by water.

There was some damage to the interior of the Hamill market and some to the Gruler grain and seed store, adjoining the Knights of Columbus temple on the north.

Fire Wipes Out Town.

Fire of unknown origin about 9 o'clock last Sunday evening destroyed a large portion of the remaining part of the business district of once prosperous Lewiston, the seat of important lumbering operations in the south part of Montmorency county for many years.

The loss is estimated at approximately $13,000.00.

The fire started in Dr. A. C. MacKinnon's drug store, the building being a mass of flames before the alarm was sounded. The fire spread to the Beckman general store, the Lewiston bank of Beckman & Barkman, and then across the street to the town hall and a residence. The inadequate fire protection and a strong wind prevented saving any of the buildings in the path of the flames.

The losses were substantially as follows: Dr. MacKinnon, building $1,500, stock $1,300; Beckman store building $1,800, stock $3,000; Lewiston bank building $1,000, fixtures, etc., $1,500; town hall, $2,000; residence, $800.

All the property loss was partly covered by insurance. About three years ago a fire swept through a portion of the business and residence district of Lewiston.

The town is practically all of wood. The lumber mills pulled out of there about six years ago, leaving the town void of industries.

Plenty of Wild Game.

Although this section of the state is well settled it is still possible for a first class hunter to kill a fox, a deer, a bear or two, and even a panther. And, it is said, one doesn't need to travel very far from Cadillac to find panther tracks. There is a large one in Cherry Grove township, farmers in that section say, and the animal recently escaped from a trap. An automobile party en route to Manton a few days ago almost ran over a red fox. Reynard skipped into the field beside the road and turned and gazed with interest at the brightly lighted car. One Cadillac man recently killed a fox not fer from the city. The state game wardens say foxes are killing many partridges this fall and that the cold weather has driven the birds into logs and brush, where they become easy victims for Reynard. Deer are probably more plentiful this year than in recent years due to the one deer law. Two McBain hunters report seeing six in Lake county, and a number have been sighted in the southwest corner of Wexford, in the vicinity of Eleanor and Hoxeyville. There are probably a half dozen bears in the townships adjacent to Cadillac. The bears are of the brown variety. There are two kinds of foxes in this region—the red fox and the woods gray.—Cadillac News.

Nothing But the Truth.

Only a few days ago the editor of a paper in Indiana grew tired of being called a liar and announced that he would tell the truth in future; and the next issue of the paper contained the following items:

John Bomin, the laziest merchant in town, made a business trip to Belleville yesterday.

John Coyle, our groceryman, is doing a poor business. His store is dirty and dusty. How can he do so much?

Rev. Styl preached last Sunday night on "Charity." The serman was punk.

Dove Sonkey died at his home in this place. The doctor gave it out as heart failure. Whiskey killed him.

Married—Miss Sylvan Rhodes and James Collin, last Saturday, at the Baptist parsonage. The bride is a very ordinary town girl, who doesn't know any more about cooking than a jack rabbit, and never helped her mother three days in her life. She is not a beauty by any means, and has a gait like a duck. The groom is an up-to-date loafer. He has been living off the old folks at home all his life and is not worth shucks. It will be a hard life.

The governor of our great state, a very ordinary man, and who was elected by accident, was here yesterday. He has very few friends here now. He promised some of the voters of this precinct a piece of pie in event of his election, but had forgotten all about it when the time to hand over the little office rolled around.—Exchange.

Easy Way to Get Money.

A good story is told of a fellow who was working on the road in a neighboring county at about $1.65 per, and wished to share in a little of the prosperity being enjoyed by the farmers, and hit upon a rether novel scheme to pull off the stunt. One day recently when the spuds were coming in pretty freely, he asked the driver of each load for a a potato, thet he might keep tab on the number of loads coming in that day. Of course, it goes without saying that he got them, and at night he gathered up the day's accumulation of spuds and brought them to town and sold them for $1.75. Thus the fellow got just about what he should have had for a day's work, when the enormous cost of everything is considered.

VAN PELT'S TOURING DIARY

Springfield, Vt., October 1, 1916.

Another day has come and gone and with it a day of our greatest pleasure. We left Rutland, Vermont, at nine a. m. and drove over the Green mountains to Woodstock. It was a charming sunshiny day, not a cloud in the sky and the sides of the mountains had more different colors than any reinbow I ever saw. The side that was facing the sun just glowed with scarlet, brown and with the different greens of the pines, spruces and hemlocks, all intermingled, which made a blanket of color that no pen can properly describe and the continual changes and angles made the day one of surpassing beauty.

On the shady side, where the sun only reached the tops of the trees, with the balance left in dark shadows, the opposite side made a scene of like beauty which rendered the decision as to the relative grandeur of the opposite sides one of extreme difficulty. Taken all in all, we think this the most pleasing and satisfactory day of our drive.

We dined at White River junction and had a very pleasant visit with Mr. Rob Meech, brother of the two sisters I called on in Burlington. From there, we drove south along the Connecticut river to Claremont, New Hampshire, where we left the valley and proceeded up the Black river to this busy little town, where I also sold flour over 50 years ago. This hotel is a jim dandy—neat and clean and oh, what a pretty place it is to stop at. I'll now go and try the sleep which comes to a poor, weary soul, filled and well satisfied with the day's doings and enjoyments. Come and go with me tomorrow over the mountains again. Good night.

JUDGE FOR YOURSELF

Which is Better—Try an Experiment or Profit by a Charlevoix Citizen's Experience.

Something new is an experiment. Must be proved to be as represented.

The statement of a manufacturer is not convincing proof of merit.

But the endorsement of friends is.

Now supposing you had a bad back,
A lame, weak, or aching one,
Would you experiment on it?
You will read of many so-called cures.
Endorsed by strangers from faraway places.
It's different when the endorsement comes from home.
Easy to prove local testimony.
Read this Charlevoix case:

Barney Herington, cement contractor, 108 W. Garfield Ave., Charlevoix, says: "About eight years ago my back gave out on me. It became so lame and sore that I could hardly bend or stoop. When I did, sharp, knife-like pains caught me in my back and I could hardly straighten up. My kidneys were out of fix also. As I had often read about Doan's Kidney Pills I tried them. Three boxes of this medicine cured me of the attack and fixed me up in good shape. Since then whenever there has been occasion to use a kidney medicine, Doan's Kidney Pills have always done good work."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. Herington had. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

THE HOT BLAST AIR-TIGHT FLORENCE

will burn anything combustible—hard or soft coal, coal siftings, coal dust, slack coal, coke, wood, saw dust and rubbish.

The fire never goes out day or night, and a steady, even temperature may be maintained.

No Smoke No Soot No Dirt

Everything consumed. No clinkers from hard or soft coal—ashes as fine as powder. The most economical stove on earth. It is not the original cost of the stove, but it is what it costs to operate it that counts. The Florence is an investment, it pays for itself in a very short time.

HEATS THE FLOOR

Remember the Florence heats the floor five or six feet from the stove. If the fire pot cracks in five years we will give you a new one free of charge. The reason for this is the Florence burns out the fuel. In all other stoves the fuel burns out the stove.

RATS ROLL EGGS DOWN FLIGHT OF STAIRS

Rodents Use Their Tails for Steering Gear—Some Rat Story.

A story of how rats rolled seven eggs down a flight of cellar steps without breaking one is told by a grocer of a neighboring town. He risks his reputation for veracity on the tale.

A grocery clerk told the merchant that rats about his store possessed powers and volunteered to prove it. The clerk and the merchant placed a case of eggs at the top of a flight of cellar steps and removed the lid. From their place of hiding they watched nnd this is what they saw: Several rats approached the eggs, then a few climbed on top. One big fellow removed an egg from its cardbonrd compartment with his feet nnd rolled it to another rat. The second rat rolled his body nround the egg after it hnd been moved to the edge of the ense. All the rats on top of the case assisting, they lowered the rat holding the egg part of the way to the ground and dropped it.

The rnt holding the egg hugged it nll the time in such n way as to prevent its being broken. The rat nnd the egg were dropped in like manner all the way down the steps until seven eggs—one at a time—hsd been rolled to the rat hole.

BAPTIST BROTHERHOOD BANQUET

your boys and your neighbors' boys and they want your aid and need it badly.

Those of you who lie back content with the smug and satisfied assurance that your own particular boy needs no guidlng hand other than your owh, that he will be peculiarly spared from contamination because he is your boy and you have brought bim up, and consequently decide that you are not interested at all in the matter, are like the ostrich, who buries his head in the sand and foolishly lmagines himself invisible and invulnerable. The fact remains and the evidence to support it bas been painfully forced upon us in the past that, given no better gathering place, boys of all ages will gravitste to the pool room, the street corner, the vacant barn, the livery stable and, in the case of older boys, even less savory hangouts.

It is up to you. If you wish it, the present club rooms may—yes, must be closed and the boys left once more free to return to their former haunts of idlenesa and vice. The presrnt membership of the Boy Scouts numbers upwards of 120, many of whom have heretofore been popularly regarded as bad and lncorrigible. These boys, reclalmed and now in process of regeneratlon, are enthusisstic members of the Scout organizatlon and well on the way to becoming honored and useful citizens. Will you now deliberately blast and wither this splendid effort with its tremendous and far reaching possibillties for good, by your faint praise, luke-warm interest or downright prejudiced condemnation, or, will you get your shoulders under it and boost like the public spirited altruists you would have men think you to be?

The most striking feature of the hanquet Tuesday night was the absence of our representative business men. What is the matter? Don't they think this proposition has a money value to them? Is that the trouble? Or is it simply rather because we are all too apt to "let George do it," as the saying goes? Of course, some who were not present have contributed what they thought they could to this movement, but, while contributions are acceptahle nnd necessary, what is needed now is the active assistance and moral support of those who should be most interested—the good citizens nnd fathers.

The churches, lodges nnd other organizations of our city will shortly be asked to furnish committees from their membership to act as an advisory board to take steps for the support and perpetuatlon of this grand, good work. Let us all get together and help the board to the limit of our capacities. It will be time and money well spent.

LEASES ROLLER RINK

Entertained Young Friends.

The Misses Grace and Edith Shores entertained a dozen young ladies at their home on Michigan avenue last Thursday night with a slumber party. A fine potluck supper, at which venison was the piece de resistance, was followed by games and a general good time, after which the party retired at an early hour—in the morning—for the "slumber" part of the program.

Why Pay the Peddler or Canvasser Twice These Prices

You can save a good deal of money by buying your stock tonic at this store, instead of paying the peddler big, fancy prices for goods of unknown quality. Look at these prices for that old reliable and guaranteed stock conditioner and worm expeller—

100 lb. drum costs $6.50

Remember; we have no peddler's wagon and horse's expenses to pay. That's why we can sell Dr. Hess Stock tonic at these rock-bottom prices.

Here is another point, Mr. Farmer, we want to emphasize, that is: Dr. Hess Stock Tonic is highly concentrated; it goes farther, as the small dose quantity proves.

Dr. Hess Stock Tonic is to put your animals in a thriving condition, make the ailing ones healthy and expel the worms—otherwise you get your money back right here at our store. We also handle

THANKSGIVING PHILOSOPHY.

YOU con pray much better to God if you say to yourself as follows: "Cousider thot this grest uolverse, of which thou ort ooly a trivial atom, is governed by fixed laws aud be therefore content la all things to obide thereby and especiahy to die at ony time aod submit to God's will of thee, whether of individual future life or dissolution lato universal mind and matter."

That is the spirit in which we should approoch Thanksgiving day eoch year. It is the doy when we make special recognition of the existence aod rulership of God. On that day we sbould thaok him for those fixed laws which are designed to work out the best result for all of his creotures. On that day we shonld consider whether we have conformed thereto ond resolve agala not to go cootrsry to them during the coming year.

Do uot say that such religion or philosophy deprives us of our free will. Nay, it does not. Thn free will which God leoves with us is freedom to cooform to these fixed laws or to deviate from or go against them. That is the free will which we havn, aad wo should resolve to exercise it properly. These are the things which Thaaksgiving day brings to our inods.—William J. Gay.

YOU'D think we could all quite agree
That the turkey is merely a bird,
But peruse this and quickly you'll see
That the species is merely inferred.

Uncle Jim, for example, will show
That our stuffing, fat gobbler out there
Isn't properly classified so,
But is rather a "perfect old bear."

Sister Kate's view is odd, to say least,
For she claims, as Thanksgiving draws near,
She can see that for gracing a feast
Our old gobbler 'll be simply a "dear."

But my dad has that turkey enrolled
In a family that's noted for buttin'.
Though that turk wasn't raised in a fold,
Dad remarks, "You're my Thanksgiving mutton."

But the turkey has sized up his kind
In a way that's most worthy of note,
For he gobbles each time he has dined,
"They are fattening me—I am the goat."

To Stuff the "Bird."

The chestnuts for stuffing the turkey may be the sweet little native ones or the larger ones from the Mediterranean countries. Cut a gash in the shell. Brush them over with melted fat and spread on a shallow pan in the oven for a short time. Then the skins will peel off with the shells or the nuts may be boiled to loosen the shells.

OF all the religious festivals of the year Thanksgiving is the only one that is for all the people. Christmas and Easter and the whole series of Christian festivals are for Christians only. The Jews have their Rosh Hoshona and their passover. The Mohammedans among us have their Ramadan, and even the Chinese have their feast days, which they observe in their own peculiar manner.

Each religion has its own, but there is one Thanksgiving day for all, when all, of whatever faith, can, in their own way, call on God and praise Jesus or Mohammed or Buddha.

Nov. 18, 1787, was our first national Thanksgiving day, ordained by the act of the Continental congress and proclaimed by George Washington. The day was set apart, in the words of the resolution, to express gratitude that God had been pleased to "smile on us in the prosecution of a just and necessary war for the defense and establishment of our unalienable rights and liberty."

The constitution had just been adopted, and before the act setting aside this day of thanksgiving had been finally passed there had been not a little discussion in congress about the propriety of the president's asking people to give thanks for a constitution for which some of them were not thankful.

It was later that the last Thursday in November came to be the day chosen, when no marked event indicated another day, and the thanks of the nation, united under the constitution, were expressed on Nov. 28, 1789. Since that day the custom has never been omitted entirely, although until the civil war it was only occasionally observed except in New England.

It was our civil war which brought the people to a new sense of national oneness, and since 1863 the president of the United States has annually issued a proclamation of thanksgiving.

But what president or prophet or sage in 1861 could have dreamed that half a century later the lines of such a proclamation would go out into all the world?

ATWOOD SECTION

ATWOOD

Snow almost gone.

Plenny Genett will run his saw mill again this winter.

Mrs. Henry Elzinga is greatly enjoying a new piano, which was placed in her home last week.

Mr. and Mrs. McPherson, of Grand Rapids, are here visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. Newland. Mrs. McPherson was formerly Nellie Newland, of Atwood.

The Atwood correspondent has a grouch. Just the other day a lady called him up and wanted to know why he didn't write all the news. She was told that the correspondent had no recollection of her having notified him of the fact that she had a visitor, and therefore he was not aware of it. Then she replied, "Well, you should have known. I thought you were the correspondent." Whew! Wouldn't that jar you? Some people think a correspondent ought to be a cross between Argus or Anna Eva Fay. They seem to think that our five senses are augmented by a sixth that lets us know everything that happens, even if we see, hear, feel, taste or smell not. Editors are only human—or at least almost human. If you have a friend visiting you, if Sammy falls and breaks his arm, if your husband chops his toe, if anything happens that makes you glad—or sad—or happy—or mad, call the correspondent up and tell him about it. That's the way to get the news in the Courier.

RANNEY DISTRICT

Edd and Fred Moore made a business trip to Springvale on Friday.

Ira Olney and Kenneth Isaman have been hunting near the Oscabel river.

Mrs. Thomas Moore left Saturday for a visit with her sister in Bellaire.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Stewart expect to go to Flint in the near future to spend the winter.

Mrs. F. J. Ranney has moved her household goods back to her farm where she expects to live again.

ANTRIM CITY

Mr. Mares is boarding at Mr. Simon's.

John Simon and family were at Mr. Rice's home Sunday.

Mr. Baumback has been hauling beans to Central Lake. Beans are coming up right along.

Glad to see the snow going off again. We will no doubt have plenty of time now for fall plowing.

Grace Brooks was unable to attend school for a few days. She was enjoying the visit of a bad cold. We are all in hopes that that visitor won't call on the rest of us.

ROCK ELM SCHOOL NOTES

Twenty of our pupils received certificates for being neither absent nor tardy during the second month of school.

The entire school was given a half holiday Friday afternoon as a reward for good attendance and deportment.

Arthur Secord is still in the lead on home work credits, having received over 400 credits in the past month.

Barton Henry is in school again after a few days absence.

The school boys have enjoyed the snow as it afforded them the pleasure of coasting and having snow ball battles.

The school balloted for president on election day and one boy; wishing to hit the right man, voted for both candidates.

Frank Lawton cut his hand quite badly one day last week.

Dr. Hopkins a Charming Speaker—Here November 29.

Whatever else you do, don't fail to hear Frederick E. Hopkins at the opera house, Wednesday, November 29th.

Dr. Hopkins is a brilliant, magnetie and charming speaker, an orator, an entertainer and an educator. No man in ycars has made a more emphatie suceess with Lyceum audiences and certainiy nbt one is better equipped for the work. Full grown, of magnetic personality, with a command of language not exeelled by any of his competitors and, withal, unmistakably the bearer of a divine "message," he brings to the platform an element of which it stands sorely in need. Dr. Hopkins' territory for ieeture work has gradually broadened, until now it extends from Minnesota to Missouri and from Nebraska to Pennsylvania. His leetures possess the double merit of combining a great deal of earnest and wholesome utteranee and a large fund of the humorous and entertaining.

COW HORN TURNIP VALUABLE CROP

100 BUSHELS PER ACRE RAISED HERE

Sown With Oats in Spring Brings More Returns Than the Grain.

One of the largest crops of cow horn turnips ever raised in Northern Michigan hss just been harvested at one of the Quinlan company farms in Emmet eounty. From a ten-aere oat field more than a thousand bushels were secured.

The crop was planted with the oats and besides proving a very valuable crop, even more so than the oats, proteeted the alfalfa seeding from the grasshoppers.

The cost of planting and harvesting was about seven cents per bushel but this is unusually high, mads so by the high wages paid farm help this fall.

The seed costs about 20 eents per acre and there is no expense for cultivation. The erop grows well in any kind of grain and can even be sown with fali grains by harrowing the fieid at seeding time in the spring.

This crop, which is just being introduced in northern Miehigan, promises to beeome mueh more popular than the mangel. Considerable cultivation is required with the mangel but with the eow horn turnip there is nothing but the sowing and harvesting.

The turnip this year is worth from 40 to 60 cents per bushel in this section. Without a doubt many aeres of this new feed for cattle will be raised in this region next summer.—Petoskey Evening News.

RURAL MAIL CARRIERS RECEIVE WINDFALL

Get Back Pay That Has Been Due Since 1914.

Rural maii carriers have reeently received quite a windfall in the shape of rebated wages as established by a recent aet of eongress, reversing the action of Postmaster General Burleson in his ruling which went into effect July 1, 1914, and which fixed the compensation of rural carriers in proportion to the length of their trips and the number of pieees of maii matter carried.

The differenee between the amount received by eaeh earrier under Mr. Burieson's ruling from the date above mentioned and that whieh he would have received for the same period on the old basis (which by the recent act of eongress is restored in full force) is, by virtue of such act, ordered rebnted or restored to the earriers affeeted by the official ruling. Thus the lucky Charlevoix carriers wiii receive enough to buy themselves at least a ton of eoal at prevailing priees and possibly have a few cents left over for cigars or candy for the kids.

LIVE STOCK PRDOUCTION AND STOCK SHOW

Plans Completed for Big Stock Exhibit December 1 to 9.

If publie interest in the International Live Stock Exposition was ever justified, this is the moment. Not only is commercial live stock production profitable to an unprecedented degree, but the task of rehabilitating the industry must he vigorously proseeuted if the nation is to be assured of an adequate supply of meat.

Improvement of live stock is the need of the hour. As eost of production increnses, breeders and feeders eannot achieve maximum results with the inferior and mediocre grades of cattle that constitute too lnrge a percentage of the stuff now reaching market.

It is an aceepted axiom that the profit is in the gain. It eorresponds with the motto of transportation speeialists that the money is in the straps, meaning passengers who are not furnished seats.

Profit in handling scrub live stock is questionable and possibly only during periods of sbnormally high priees. If cattle raising is to be placed on a permanently staple basis, the present system must be abandoned.

The management of the International Live Stock Exposition is exploiting nn idea that is slowly gaining ground. Education is a proverbially slow process and progress is attained only by persistent endeavor. To insure maximum profits at minimum cost in the sphere of meat produetion is the mission of the International Live Stock Exposition. That mission is primarily designed to benefit the produeer, ineidentaliy it will work to the advantage of the earrier, the manufacturer and the consumer, consequentiy ita success is desirable from many angles.

From a utilitarian standpoint the International Live Stock Exposition, whieh will this year be held during the first week in Deeember, stands in the front rank of the world's educational institutions.

Thanksgiving Proclamation.

By the Governor.

"No Man Liveth to Himself Alone." This declnration is so simple that a child can understand it.

This year, of all years of this great Republic, is a fitting time for thanksgiving. No nation liveth to itself alone. May we on Thanksgiving Day, remember in our prayers and aets, the millions of widows and orphans, the millions of maimed and dying, the millions of prisoners of war in other lands. They are our kindred. May America become a beacon light of liberty to all the world.

Therefore, I, Woodbridge N. Ferris, governor of the state of Michigan, do hereby join the president of the United States in designating Thursday, the thirtieth of November as a day for all of the people of this commonwealth to celebrnte in thanksgiving nnd prayer.

Given under my hand and the Great Seal of the state this twenty-fourth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and aixteen, and of the commonwealth the eightieth.

HOTEL MICHIGAN HAS CLOSE CALL

INTERIOR OF HOSTELRY BADLY DAMAGED BY FIRE

Prompt Work of Fire Department Saves Structure From Being Totally Destroyed.

Fire started on the second floor of the Hotel Michigan near the center of the building last Friday morning at 2:30 o'clock and gave the fire department a pretty stiff fight until half past five, when the last flame was extinguished. A 40 mile gale was blowing and at one time it was thought that she was "a goner," when the flames, having worked their way up through the building, burst out through the roof. Only the quick work of the firemen in getting their lines spread and connected and the water turned on saved the day. They took in a line of hose from both sides of the building east and west, and more lines were spread in reserve, ready for instant use in other places.

The fire was first discovered by Dr. Armstrong who was returning home from a belated hurry call and who smelled smoke. Going into his own house, he went to an upstairs window, from which he could see the flames through the back windows of the hotel, although they were not visible to passers by either on Bridge or Antrim streets. The doctor ran down and turned in the alarm, which was answered only by the bell on the fire house, which, of course, owing to the high wind, could be heard but a little distance (by the way—when, oh when, will the city fathers get busy on the fire whistle proposition?)

From all indications, the fire had its origin in the linen closet, which is situated just to the right of the fire place on the second floor, which in turn is just above the big fire place on the first floor. The flames burned a hole about 11 feet long and two feet wide through the floor of the linen closet into the big front sitting room and office below and when the firemen first entered the building the smoke and sparks were pouring down through this opening. The fire also worked its way into a bedroom adjoining the linen closet, gutting everything thoroughly, and then worked its way to the roof, where it burst through, making a hole about four feet square. It also worked down and broke through a corner of the main dining room ceiling. As usual water did most of the damage.

The exact manner in which the fire started is not known as yet. According to the statement of the management, Mr. and Mrs. Frank T. Biossat, no one had entered the linen room for weeks past, the electric current had been turned off from the building and no fires had been built since the close of business in the fall. The Rev. Walker and J. P. Johnson had passed through the building, going to the kitchen and the barn, the afternoon preceding the fire, but had not been upstairs nor had they smelled any smoke. Nothing in the building appeared to be disturbed, as if any one had been camping out in the hotel or having broken in had been occupying the rooms.

Two possible explanations of the fire are advanced by the management—one that mice in the linen closet and matches carelessly dropped thereby someone before the hotel was closed, might have got together. Another that spontaneous combustion took place in the contents of the closet. Mr. Biossat is vigorously probing the matter, however, and expects to reach a definite conclusion as to the cause of the fire and the loss sustained this week.

CHRISTMAS SHIP LEAVES DECEMBER 1

Carries Greeting of One Country to Stricken Races of Another.

The Christmas ship for 1916 will leave New York, December 1, carrying rice, beans, wheat, sugar, condensed milk, flour, cottonseed oil, together with hundreds of cases of warm underwear, shoes, stockings, blankets, etc., with "the holiday good wishes of one country to the stricken races of another."

As a necessary preliminary to the sending of the Christmas ship, arrangements are being made for collections in the churches of the entire country Thanksgiving day, the receipts of which will be used in completing the cargo.

DIED FROM ATTACK OF HEART TROUBLE

Frank Reed Had Been a Resident of County for 30 Years.

Frank Reed, for many years a Charlevoix resident, died at his home on the Norwood road last Saturday night from an attack of heart failure. Mr. Reed had been ailing since spring and election day, when he acted as Democratic watcher at the polls, though suffering intensely at the time, was his last appearance about town. The end came at about ten o'clock in the evening.

The deceased was born about 55 years ago in the village of Britton, Michigan. He resided for upwards of 30 years in Charlevoix county and for the past 15 years was employed as sawyer at the Charlevoix Lumber company's mill. He leaves a wife and daughter in this city and his mother, Mrs. Anna Reed, at Britton.

The funeral services will be held at the Methodist church today, after which the body will be taken to Brookside cemetery for burial.

A BIG TREAT BEING PREPARED

BASKET BALL BENEFIT PROMISES BIG FEATURES

Fund Raised to Be Used to Purchase Suitable Equipment and Repair Building.

A treat is being prepared for the people of Charlevoix in the form of a concert in which the musical and reading talent of "The Best Little City Anywhere," will present an interesting program.

The Basket Ball Benefit Concert promises to be one of the big features of the Charlevoix entertainments. The fact that it will have the best of Charlevoix's talent represented, will insure its success.

Everybody recognizes that the rink is a good thing for our young people, but those who manage it realize that this proposition can not be carried on with out sufficient money. They are at the present time in need of numerous articles of equipment, in the way of suits, for the respective teams, and some much needed repairs of the building to make it as comfortable as possible.

They are taking this manner to secure the funds, and believe that the people will be generous with the solicitors. If sufficient money is raised by this means it is hoped to make the rink free to all boys of the town.

The Benefit Concert will be held in the Congregational church, on Wednesday, December 6, at 8 o'clock. Admission will be 25 cents.

PAPER SITUATION HAS BECOME ACUTE

The paper situation is becoming more and more critical every day and the final outcome is difficult to conjecture. Every kind of stock used in the production of newspapers and commercial printing has advanced in many cases to figures more than double what it formerly cost. Ordinary news print paper that just a year ago cost $2.40 per hundred is now hard to get at $7.50 per hundred. Envelops, ruled headings and letter head stock is practically doubled in price.

This is the exact situation the publisher of a newspaper is up against. We will still continue to charge the old subscription price of the Courier, $1.50 per year, but the situation compels us to ask, yes, not only ask but insist, that subscribers pay their subscriptions when due, and possibly a year in advance. Look at the label on your paper, it will tell you just where you stand. If you are a year behind, send in the money or call and settle personally.

Every subscriber has received a statement of his account and many have responded to our appeal. But there are still hundreds of accounts on our list that should be settled. It is not the purpose of the Courier to raise a cry of alarm, but we feel that our subscribers should be acquainted with the situation, just as it is, when we anticipate they will be glad to assist us as much as they can in giving relief. Make it a point to pay your account without further notice.

ANY OLD PORT IN A STORM

SUCH IS ELECTRIC SITUATION IN CHARLEVOIX

City Council Passes Resolution Monday Night to Again Enter Into Contract With Richardi.

"Any old port in a storm" is about the proper way of explaining the electric light and power situation in Charlevoix. The matter has been in the air for sometime, and up to Monday night no real solution of the matter has presented itself.

Present indications are that Henry Richardi, who was dumped overboard last spring, is again to be the leading factor in the solution of the matter. Anyway, Henry has made promises sufficient to convince the council that he means business and can produce the goods, and on the strength of these, the council passed a resolution Monday night to again contract with him for electric current. Below is the resolution:

"Moved by Alderman See and seconded by Alderman Paddock, that the city of Charlevoix enter into contract with Mr. Henry Richardi for electric current at 3 1-2 cents per k. w. hour, with a minimum of $25.00 per day for ten years. Carried by the following vote: Ayes—See, Paddock, Hiller and Cartier. Nays—Geiken.

This was followed by a second resolution as follows:

"Moved by Alderman Hiller and seconded by Alderman See, that the city attorney be authorized to confer with the representatives of Mr. Henry Richardi for the purpose of drafting a contract between the city of Charlevoix and Mr. Richardi, for electric lighting purposes for submission to the council. Carried by the following vote: Ayes—See, Paddock, Cartier and Hillor. Nays—Geiken.

Such is the situation at present. We have been informed that Richardi and his company have reorganized or are about to reorganize, with sufficient capital and resources to equip themselves to satisfactorily handle the contract. In the meantime, a new contract will be submitted to the council, who will either ratify or reject it.

ENTERTAINED A REAL BISHOP

METHODIST CHURCH SCENE OF A BIG BANQUET

Noted Divine Makes Strong Plea for More Devoted Personal Service in Church Work.

The banquet in honor of Bishop Theodore S. Henderson, held Monday evening in the big dining room of the Methodist church, was a success from every standpoint and the large attendance a flattering tribute to the wide reputation of this gifted Christian leader and the high esteem in which he is held, not only in the Methodist church, but by members of all the other Christian denominations throughout the country.

The big tables were filled to capacity and the banquet certainly a culinary triumph. When the tables had been cleared of their burden of good things, the guests faced their chairs towards the bishop's table and the honored speaker of the evening was introduced by A. Buttars in a few well chosen sentences, in which he recalled the early struggles and experiences of the early founders of the church in this community, emphasizing the fact that the church organization at the dedication of the present building was free and clear of debt and actually had a small balance to their credit in the treasury, an occurrence, he claimed, almost without precedent in the history of the church.

Bishop Henderson told of the gratifying interest being taken in the Lord's work, in Detroit and elsewhere, by influential men of large means and wide business activities, both in point of contributions and of personal service, especially emphasizing the church's need of the latter. His analysis of the reasons for the general apathy among men towards aggressive, active service in the different departments of church work, was unusually keen and to the point. It was putting the cart before the horse, said the bishop, for a man to claim that he was not interested in the work of the Sunday school or the labors of the missionary, and consequently would not contribute either of his time or substance. It was, he said, rather that because we have no investment in those things, we have no interest in them and quoted the Scripture to prove his assertion that where a man's riches are, there lies his heart also.

This is the first time a bishop of the church has visited Charlevoix and no effort was spared to make his stay with us both memorable and pleasant.

Sprained Her Ankle.

Mrs. James Gaskin, Sr., slipped and fell on the slippery sidewalk in front of the Hotel Michigan last Friday evening, severely spraining her ankle. At this writing she is still in considerable pain, but doing as well as might be expected in the case of an injury of this kind, a sprain being a slow and stubborn thing to heal.

KANSAS EDITOR TELLS EXACT WAR SITUATION

Allies and Germans Seem to Be at a Standstill.

The war editor of a Kansas newspaper figures it out like this, and he makes the situation plainer than the ordinary news dispatches:

"The allies' left is trying to move around the German's right, but the German's right is also moving around the allies' left. Now if the left of the German's right moves around the right of the allies' left then what is left of the German right must be right where the allies left. But if the German right's left is left, right where the allies' left right was right before the allies left then the left is left where the right left the right's left. Isn't that right? Or is it?

CHARACTERS SEEMED TO FIT THEIR PARTS

Such Is Opinion of Those Who Witness Missionary Entertainment

The entertainment planned by the Congregational Woman's Missionary society was carried out last Thursday night despite the inclement weather.

"Cindy's Chance" concluded the program and left the audience with wet eyes and tender hearts, for it was not only a touching play, but it was given with rare sympathy and feeling.

The first part of "Granny" (Miss Mary Clarke) so determined that "Cindy" (Mrs. Vandermade) should have her chance, so forgetful of self in her joy when she got it, was a remarkable piece of amateur acting. Indeed, all the characters seemed to fit their parts so well that a lady who had spent some months in the south declared that it all seemed perfectly real to her.

It is likely that the missionary society will give similar entertainments for the purpose of creating interest in their work by portraying the need of Christ throughout the world.

STRICKEN BY HEART FAILURE

DEATH OF MRS. JACOBS SHOCK TO COMMUNITY

End Came to Wife of Local Merchant Without Warning—Funeral Held Sunday.

The entire city was greatly shocked and grieved last Friday evening when it was learned that Mrs. Henry Jacobs had passed away very suddenly at her home on State street. Mrs. Jacobs had been in rather poor health for some time, but it was not thought that her condition was at all serious, and her sudden death was a great shock to her many relatives and friends.

The funeral occurred Sunday at 2 o'clock at the home, the Rev. Quinton Walker officiating. Those in attendance from outside were Mrs. Jacob's brother, Wirt, of Pontiac, and Mrs. Jacobs' brother, Alfred, and niece, Lillian Durgan, of Columbiaville.

Susie Durgan was born in Durlin 1884, after her mother's death, ganville, New York, April 28, 1873. she came to Michigan to live with her sister, Mrs. Lizzie Shatuck. On May 15, 1891, she was united to Mr. Henry Jacobs at West Branch. They came to Charlevoix in October, 1894, and have since resided here. Four children were born to them, Dannie, who died in infancy, Harold and Kenneth of this city, and Mrs. Glenn Ellis, of Petoskey.

Mrs. Jacobs was a member of the Methodist church, an earnest Christian woman, and beloved by all who knew her. Her influence was always on the side of right and she made herself a power for good in the community in which she lived. The bereaved husband and children have the sympathy of the entire city in their sorrow.

MICHIGAN MEN MAY BE HOME

IF CARRANZA SIGNS PACT THEY ARE TO RETURN

Wolverine Soldiers May Yet Eat New Year's Dinner at Home.

If Gen. Carranza signs immediately the protocol providing for the withdrawal of the Pershing expedition from Mexico, at least two regiments of Michigan militia are likely to eat their New Year's dinner at home, army officers declared today.

The Mexican-American commission has set December 8 to reconvene and it is hoped before that date to have Carranza's signature to the agreement, which President Wilson has already tacitly approved. The agreement requires the withdrawal of the 12,000 regular troops in the Pershing expedition within 40 days and it will require about all of that time, officers declare, to return them. The return of militia from the border, they believe, however, will begin as soon as Gen. Pershing's soldiers turn their faces northward.

Michigan's Turn Coming.

It was announced some time ago that the national guards regiments would be withdrawn in about the same order that they went to the border. The Thirty-first Michigan reached El Paso on July 14 and the Thirty-second left the state camp at Grayling on the same day. Of the more than 100,000 militia still on the border, approximately 30,000 reached their stations ahead of the first two Michigan regiments. Of these early troops approximately one-half are from New York, Illinois and Pennsylvania. The militia of New Jersey, Massachusetts and California also sent out early, has been returned home and mustered out.

Other states which sent troops down ahead of Michigan were Idaho, Indiana, Maryland, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Oregon, Utah, Virginia, Washington and Wisconsin.

The Thirty-third Michigan regiment departed for the border October 11; batteries A and B, October 5; the engineering company and signal corps, October 9, and troops A and B of cavalry, October 11.

42,000 Regulars There.

In addition to the 12,000 regular soldiers now in Mexico there are about 42,000 regulars on the border. For some time the regular officers have been transferring militiamen to the regular army, wherever they could find a man willing to stay in the service. It is hoped that regular recruits from the militia regiments will go a long way toward pulling the regular regiments up to their full quota, about 70,000 men.

Even the 54,000 regular troops now in Mexican service, officials say, will be ample to protect the border, unless Mexican conditions become much worse than at present. The present large force has been maintained on the border because of the existence of the Pershing line, extending 200 miles into Mexico, to come quickly to the aid of the expeditionary force in event of a serious attack by Mexicans.

"A Shine in Every Drop"

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

[Copyright, 1915, by American Press Association.]

"EM," called old Mrs. Tatem from her bedroom adjoining the kitchen. "Em, come here! I want to talk to you."

"Well, ma?" said Em wearily, sinking into a chair near the window, which overlooked the yard.

"Ain't you heard from the company about the dividend on that gas stock?" asked the pine, ill old woman.

"Not a word," admitted Em ruefully.

"Lordy, me! I kinder wish your pa hadn't put all his money into Donaldsville gas stock. Why, he even mortgaged the house to buy more stock," went on Mrs. Tatem. "It was all right as long as they paid dividends, but now—why, it's six months overdue!"

"Yes, ma."

"You're a wonderful manager, Em, to make that last money stretch over so many months. I suppose you got some left?"

Em thought of her worn purse, which contained one copper cent.

"Yes, ma, some," she replied, getting up and smoothing the big pillows. "I'm going out to get some dinner for you. Could you eat an egg?"

"Yes, Emmy, I think I could relish an egg."

Em Tatem stood by the kitchen window looking out across the yard, now brown and bare, swept by November winds. She was a sweet faced, patient looking woman of thirty-five, and her still abundant fair hair and blue eyes added to her charms. People said that Em Tatem had faded dreadfully the past year, but they did not guess it was because Em was slowly starving herself so that there would be enough for the beloved mother.

"If it hadn't been for the gas stock!" she murmured, with tears filling her eyes. There came a knock at the door. "Ma wants to know if you can spare a dozen eggs," said a little girl. Em went into her pantry and counted the eggs in the blue bowl. There were exactly fourteen. She would save two for her mother, and with the 18 cents in hand she could buy some meat. Em did not dare tell her mother that there now remained in the poultry yard one lone Plymouth Rock hen.

Em put the eggs in the girl's basket. "How is your mother, Mary?" she asked.

"She's pretty well, Miss Tatem. She's awful busy, though. You know tomorrow's Thanksgiving. And, oh, Miss Tatem, she says she'll pay you as soon as she gets some change." And Mary ran down the path.

Em stared after the child with hard, resentful eyes.

"It's wicked, downright wicked!" she cried fiercely. "They've all got money and food and everything. Tomorrow will be Thanksgiving day, and not a thing to eat! I'll have to kill Eliza. Maybe ma could eat her if she was roasted with sage dressing."

Em went down to the chicken house, where the solitary hen, Eliza, had wandered disconsolately about.

"It will seem like killing a friend to harm Eliza," thought Em. "Where is the critter anyway? She's laid her egg this morning, and—oh, Eliza!"

Em's surprise and grief were justified by the sight of poor Eliza's dead body within the nest. Eliza had died at her post of duty.

After Em Tatem had given Eliza's corpse decent burial she hurried into the house and prepared a poached egg and a cup of tea for her mother's dinner. After the meal Mrs. Tatem dozed off into her afternoon nap.

Em locked the doors and went up the steep hill back of the house and entered the little grove of locust trees that separated her property from Deacon Pepper's farm. She approached the boundary fence and looked over into the deacon's lot. Here had wandered Deacon Pepper's fine flock of turkeys. All had been sold save two, the giant of the flock and a small hen turkey which no one wanted. Of course the deacon would kill the gobbler for his own table. Although he was a bachelor, he often entertained his many friends and relatives.

"I've got to look out for ma, and they can't want that little hen—and I hope I'll be forgiven, but I can't let ma die!" with these mingled prayers and excuses Em drew from her pocket a handful of corn and tossed it toward the turkeys.

They came running toward her, the gobbler greedily pushing his small companion out of the way. Em threw another handful and another, gradually luring the birds toward the fence. On her side she had spread an old fish net on the ground.

But, to her dismay, it was the bronze gobbler which came to her net. The little hen wearied of the unequal chase for grains of corn and wandered off. Presently Em Tatem was muffling the violently protesting voice of the gobbler with her knitted jacket while she dumped him, his feet still entangled in the net, into an empty sack.

It was Thanksgiving morning. In the darkest corner of the Tatem cellar was a heap of bronze turkey feathers. Up on the hillside was an acrid smell of smoke from the bonfire where Em Tatem had cremated other evidences of her crime.

A delicious smell of roasted turkey pervaded the Tatem house.

Em moved a little round table to her mother's bedside and spread a snowy linen cloth. There were a glass of grape jelly, some light biscuits, a dish of boiled rice, a pot of fragrant tea and—the turkey.

"Em Tatem," gasped her mother as Em, pale and smiling, sat down at table, "where did you ever get that turkey?"

"Never mind," evaded Em mysteriously. "All you've got to do, ma, is to enjoy it."

"You're not eating a mite, Em," protested Mrs. Tatem after awhile. "That turkey's better than the one your pa bought from old Deacon Pepper for our silver wedding anniversary. That was a delicious turkey. Old Deacon Pepper always did have fine turkeys. When Sadie Denton was here yesterday she told me that young Deacon Pepper has raised and sold a fine flock. They said he made $75 clear off the whole lot."

"Yes," murmured Em.

"I never hear you speak of Ned Pepper, Em."

"No, ma."

Mrs. Tatem looked shrewdly at her daughter. It was something of a shock to her to discover that Em looked sick.

"Like enough she's worked herself to death sewing for Mrs. Meek, so's she

The senior class expressed their gratitude for the party and it will surely be returned by the members of the senior class.

Monday night was the first basket ball practice and a good bunch of aspirants were out. Prospects seem good for a successful basket ball team this season, and hopes for a berth on this team are running high among the boy students. P. S. NORTHERN MICHIGAN HAPPENINGS

Events of Interest to Courier Readers

Bears Carry Off Sheep.

Bears are carrying off stock from the Welch ranch at Onaway this year, according to reports received from thereby members of the family living in Ionia. Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Welch are now at the ranch and a number of helpers are working to round up the sheep and prepare for the winter season.

At the round-up 15 or 20 sheep were missing and the next day a hunt was instituted to find them. During the search a mother bear with two cubs was sighted and an organized hunt for bears was started. The old bear and one of the cubs were finally killed, and the other still is being hunted. The bears were in fine condition, fat and large, and the cubs were old enough to do plenty of mischief. It took six shots to kill the old bear, the last two being fired by Henry Lebman. Harry and Fred Lebman are helping Mr. Welch on the ranch this season. A similar loss has been reported by an adjoining rancher and bears have been traced there.

One Crop Paid for Farm.

On every hand you hear of the bumper priced loads of produce that our farmers have hauled this fall, and many a crop of potatoes has more than paid for the farm that it was grown on. Jackson & Tindle's store in Pellston paid $1,800 to two brothers by the name of Stoneburner, who each went on to a wild 40 a few miles northwest of that town last spring. This amount was for their potato crops alone, and they had sold about $50 worth of potatoes to a neighbor, besides reserving enough for next year's seed. They also raised considerable other produce. They each bought their 40 acre farms on contract, and the contract price of each was $720, so it is readily seen that they have made enough on their potato crop to much more than pay for all the land. And under the cut-over land act they will have no taxes to pay for five years.

George Stark, who lives three miles west of Pellston, brought one load of potatoes to town last week that brought him $99.00.

Frank Compoe realized about $700 from a few acres of potatoes, raised a lot of beans, corn, hay and other crops, besides engaging in stock raising. He brought in a sack of beans the other day, about two and one-half bushels, and exchanged it for $14.00 in cash.

These are but few of the instances that are common in this region, and give ample proof that nowhere is there a better opportunity to get a start and make a success of farming than in northern Michigan.

Shot Off His Hand.

Vincent A. Roberts, a farmer residing about seven miles southeast of Petoskey at what is known as the Joy Valley settlement, was brought to Petoskey hospital last Monday afternoon suffering from a gun shot wound in his right arm.

He was in the woods looking timber at about noon Monday and was carrying his shot gun. He slipped and in falling the gun was discharged, the shot nearly tearing his hand from his arm.

He was very weak from loss of blood and the shock when he reached the hospital but it is believed he will recover.

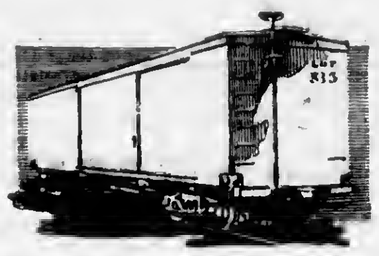
Overland Automobiles

Which Do You Prefer?



Pullman or Freight?

No one would think of riding in a freight car if he could enjoy the comfort of a big, comfortable easy riding Pullman parlor car.

So with automobiles. Most of the popular priced cars ride like freight cars. This is due to the old fashioned type of spring.

Many manufacturers still continue to use them.

The Overland does not. The 75 B Overland has the latest type of cantilever shock absorbing springs. As a result it is one of the easiest riding cars in the world.

One demonstration will prove this.

SCHOOL COMMISSIONER'S NOTES

A number of schools have started their Christmas programs. The Ranney schools is to have a Christmas play.

The Chaddock school last box social on Friday night. Unique invitations on paper turkeys.

Three second visits were made during the past week.

Otelia Schultz, Thomas Hitchcock, Walter and Charles Cooper are reported as having completed the required amount of home work for the entire year. Orville Boyer and Walter Kemp did a half year's work in one month.

It was a rainy day when the commissioner visited Rock Elm and recess was so unique and appropriate that it was a relief compared to most rainy day programs. The boys played the Chinese game of skin and snake, the girls played head and tail, and then the commissioner became so interested that she taught the school how to run a Japanese crab race. They were given three minutes of out door exercise.

Pictures of the standard schools of the county have at last been collected and the directory will soon be on its way to the long expectant officers and teachers.

The household editor of the Michigan Farmer has become very interested in the home work idea and has asked several questions during the past two weeks.

"Experience proves the home credit plan full of promise." Prof. Davis, Wisconsin university.

What is the greatest question in the world? The education of our boys and girls.

The Rock Elm school board have ordered 22 single adjustable seats and 100 square feet of hylo plate blackboard. We may not say yet that they are a standard school but we shall say that they will be two-thirds ideal when present plans are completed.

Mr. Dewey reports 21 not absent the first month and 20 the second month.

Has your district a library established by a vote at a district meeting? No? Then your neighboring district gets your share of the penal fine money to invest in workable books for the school equipment shelf, that's all. And your teacher is longing for tools with which to cultivate the garden of your children's thought growth.

Charlevoix people should know that a few doses of simple bucktborn bark, glycerine, etc., as mixed in Adler-i-ka, often relieve or prevent appendicitis. This mixture removes such surprising foul matter that ONE SPOONFUL relieves almost ANY CASE constipation, sour stomach or gas. The INSTANT, easy action of Adler-i-ka is surprising. B. A. VAN PELT'S TOURING DIARY

North Adams, Massachusetts,

The Berkshire, Monday, Oct. 2, 1916

This has been a hard day—110 miles and over only dirt roads. We left Springfield, Vermont, feeling that we were leaving behind us one of the best places we have stopped at. Our trip over another range of the Green Mountains was very pleasant and we reached Manchester, 30 miles, in three hours. This valley is very fertile and all the farm houses were painted white. The barns were extra large and also painted.

We dined at Bennington, Vermont, and then drove over into "York state." We went about 15 miles out of our way in order that I might see my grandfather's old house. Seventy-three years ago I was put up on the top of a gate post and told to say "down with the rent," as a motley crowd of farmers passed by, some carrying guns, some clubs, etc. They were trying to get rid of paying ground rent to the old Dutch patroons, who held title to large tracts of land which they leased for so many bushels of wheat, cords of wood, chickens, etc., and a certain number of days work. These men were called anti-renters. The house was in good condition and still painted, same as when first built. The family are all gone and the place is gone into other hands, the same as all other homes in this part of the country. The old stock is fast disappearing and may we hope the coming crop may be an improvement on the old and yet, sometimes I think they are not so—bad as they might be. Good night.

MOUNTAIN SCHOOL NOTES

Five new pupils will enter school on Monday. This will make an enrollment of 17.

We are very busy preparing a program for Thanksgiving and making plans for a social which will be held Wednesday, November 29.

The farmers of this district will hold a corn and vegetable display at the school on Friday afternoon, December 8. Prizes will be awarded for the corn. Light refreshments will be served.

Owing to the disagreeable weather some of the farmers are still waiting for the arrival of the threshing machine.

Much progress is being made in our penmanship work with A. N. Palmer as a guide.

The children are very much interested in making a mother goose border with which to decorate the walls.

In spite of the cold and disagreeable weather 17 ventured out to Sunday school last Sunday.

CHURCH FAIRS AND DINNERS

The season of church, society and charity fairs and sales is upon us. The few weeks before Christmas are a peculiarly favorable time for such events, as many people depend upon them for purchase of Christmas presents. But from now until spring most of the organizations of certain types find some form of sale a regular part of their financial program.

Of course these fairs are not based on sound economics. It would be a lot cheaper for those who buy, sell, and work, to take out of their pockets the same amount and give it. You may make up a sofa pillow with material costing $1.00 and put $1.00 worth of time on it, and finally sell it for 75 cents. The church workers exhaust themselves with the labor of the thing, and the results are pitifully meagre.

But, perhaps, these fairs serve a good purpose. The ladies (God bless them) must be busy about something, and if they are talking about the fair they aren't gossiping about their neighbors or doing some of the other things which Satan finds for idle tongues—and hands—to do.

But, from the religious point of view, we believe these church fairs and dinners are all wrong. It always makes us hopping mad all the way through to get wheedled into going to one of these church dinners and then stand and wait and watch some stingy old sinner, who won't give five cents to the church as a religious duty, fill his old gizzard full of perfectly good food to the value of a dollar or more and then when his stomach gets cutting up and his eyes don't see straight he imagines he sees a halo of glory above his head for his goodness in having given 25 cents to the Lord when he dug up a quarter for the dollar's worth of grub with which he stuffed himself.

No, no; we are not slumming the ladies. Again we say, God bless them! The churches wouldn't amount to much if it were not for their faithfulness. They are doing the very best they know how to keep up the church finances. If the men were doing their part the dinners and fairs wouldn't be necessary.

THE MODERN THANKSGIVING DAY

According to the rhetorical proclamations issued by presidents and governors, and according to historical traditions, Thanksgiving day is a religious occasion. We are to meet in our churches and publicly render thanks to God for His goodness. Also in private devotions we are humbly to express our gratitude.

The average American passes over all this very lightly. He is a bit ashamed of religious feeling. If there is a sentiment of gratitude in his heart he would not confess it. Thanksgiving day is principally a day for eating a big dinner, usually more than the human stomach can take care of. There are aftermaths of indigestion. In a great many places it is a day for foot ball. The churches are sparsely attended.

No occasion can have real significance where the principal event is eating a big dinner. Turkey courses do not promote moral, spiritual, or civic advance. But there are at least two phases of the day that are in every way worthy of its best traditions.

It is still the occasion for a good many family reunions. Not as many as formerly, for families are scattered now. The servant question, the high price of food, act as a check. Not so frequently do you see those enormous tables filled with parties of 10, 20, or 30 relatives. The large Thanksgiving day reunion is apt now to take place at a hotel. The return to the old hearthstone is much of a myth. But it is a mighty good thing to renew the old ties of relationship. There ought to be a certain binding relation of intimacy between blood kindred, but it would never survive were it not for these occasional reunions.

Undoubtedly there are more deeds of charity today than ever before. This is the best kind of expression of the feeling of the day, better even than any church service. So long as so many turkeys and pies and cakes are delivered unostentatiously at the doors of the poor, the very best sentiment of the day is preserved.

The fellows who lost in the election will at least have the satisfaction of knowing that the dear people will not be cussing them for their failure to make good on their promises.

If you have run out of ideas for Xmas, here is one—send the Courier to some one. It will go to your friends 52 times during the year and they will appreciate it, too.

JURYS VERDICT WAS NOT GUILTY

Says William Duba Is Not Guilty of Violating Game Laws.

The case of William Duba, charged with violating the state fish and game laws, was tried in the justice court before a jury last Thursday, both justices sitting. R. W. Kane appeared for the defendant and the jury after a short deliberation brought a verdict of no cause of action.

It was maintained by the defense that the evidence was lacking to prove that the accused had caught the fish, which were discovered in his boat on the night of November 2nd by Sheriff Novak and his posse, in Pine lake. Nothing in the testimony of the crew of the game warden's boat tended to shake Duba's statement that he was on his way to East Jordan to sell his cargo, that his engine stalled, and that while attempting to fix it their craft drifted into Oyster Bay, from which they were unable to emerge until the fog, which had settled down over the lake, had lifted. Although the bay was thoroughly combed, nothing in the shape of a net was found.

The fact that this case has fallen through does not alter the fact that there is every reason to believe that the illegal fishing which the man on the street has heard of from time to time in years past, is not now going on. Watchful waiting must be our policy for the present.

HOW TO PRUNE TREES ANNUALLY SO THEY FLOURISH.

Prune annually, but not heavily.
Do not cut out large limbs.
Frostbitten wounds are slow to heal.
Never leave stubs in cutting off limbs.
Wounds heal most rapidly in spring.
Keep trees free from suckers.
Torn wounds are generally fatal.
Summer pruning induces fruitfulness.
Heavy pruning is always followed by a heavy growth of suckers.
Winter pruning, when the tree is wholly dormant, increases the vigor of the tree.
In transplanting cut back, top and root. Burn all the wood to prevent spread of insects and disease.

PANAMA CANAL OUTDUG.

Miners of West Virginia Do Bigger Job of Excavating.

Do you know that the coal miners of West Virginia have actually outdug the excavators of the Panama canal? The big canal has been advertised in a hundred ways, says the Coal Age. Not a word has been said about the even more wonderful feat of the miners. That's why you don't know that in the eleven years while the much heralded work at the Panama canal was producing 295,323,000 cubic yards of earth—and all of the excavating was being done on the surface—the coal miners of West Virginia were getting out of the bowels of the earth 542,049,446 cubic yards. Think of it!

When the engineers of the Panama canal in 1903 began their work they made a careful survey and found that approximately 195,323,000 cubic yards of excavation were necessary. This was regarded as a stupendous undertaking and was commonly spoken of as the largest excavation job the world has ever seen. Laborers were imported to the canal zone and column after column was written showing how marvelously these laborers were "making the dirt fly" under the direction of the most expert engineers the world has ever seen.

But the 195,323,000 cubic yards, the original estimate, were not all that the Panama canal laborers were to dig after they had started. On account of the slides in Culebra cut another 100,000,000 cubic yards were to be added to their work. This made 295,323,000 cubic yards, which were dug in eleven years.

Under conditions far more difficult the coal miners of West Virginia did an amount of excavating in the same eleven years that made the digging incident at the Panama canal look like child's play. The work of these West Virginia miners has never been heralded to the world. The general public has paid little attention.

But the fact remains that the men who work underground in the mines of West Virginia have done a vastly bigger job in the digging line than the men who work in the open on the Panama canal.

water to the overflow. The increased cold surface and heat absorption afforded by two gallons or more of ice cold water is stated to add materially to the value of the refrigerator, cooling the food much more quickly and maintaining a reduced temperature in the food compartment. The device may be installed in any refrigerator, old or new.

Use of Varnish Pure.

Every can of varnish should stand upon the reputation which its maker has established for it. In many cases this varnish represents the lifework of one man or a group of men. You cannot afford to attempt to improve upon this concentrated essence of thought and skill and mechanical attainment. In other words, do not doctor the varnish. Rather by the most skillful methods in preparing for and applying it seek to develop and maintain the best possible results. This is the day of fine varnishes, in the development of which the varnish maker has done his part. Do your part equally well by using it as it comes from the factory.—Blacksmith and Wheelwright.

Removing Tarnish From Silver.

There is no solvent for silver sulphide or tarnish on silverware that is not a better solvent for the silver itself, says Popular Mechanics. Therefore the tarnish cannot be removed in a solution. However, this coating can be removed electrically. Make a dilute acid solution, one part chemically pure sulphuric acid to ten parts of water and use a carbon electrode. The tarnish will disappear in a few minutes without injury to the silver. In the absence of a battery suspend the silverware in the solution and bring a piece of aluminium in contact with it. This will restore the luster.

Mounting Auto Headlights.

Headlights mounted rather high would be safer if they were focused so that their top rays would be approximately horizontal. This would prevent the glare from bothering others, as the light would be below the line of vision of another driver or even a pedestrian in most cases.

Sapphires in Shop Work.

Sapphires are in many cases as useful as diamonds in shop work; they are less difficult to grind, their first cost is much less, and if properly shaped sapphire tools will cut glass hard steel.

CHAPTER IX.

Doctor and Patient.

FAT JOE leaned over and drew a blanket a little higher across the sleeping man's shoulder, while Steve continued silently to study Garry's face. Even in unconsciousness a faintly crooked smile of skepticism still clung to the lips.

"It was like him," Steve remarked at last very soberly. "Somehow the minute he began to speak I knew it was exactly the sort of thing I expected him to say. The probability of death is a much more amusing prospect to some men, Joe, than the perplexity of living."

Fat Joe flashed a swift, half puzzled glance at his chief's face. He started to ask a question, then scowled and checked himself and turned instead to kindle a fire in the stove of the lean-to kitchen of the cabin. But a half hour later he was still murmuring the last phrase over to himself perplexedly when Steve came leading the horse Ragtime up to the open door. Saddled and with reins a-trail, the animal had been wandering throughout the night about the upper end of the construction camp clearing. At the sound of hoofbeats outside Fat Joe left the stove and the half cooked breakfast he had set himself to prepare.

"So that's the way one of 'em come," he murmured. "I was wondering some. Last night I didn't notice the horse, being a mite too hurried to give ample attention to details, as it were. But ain't—ain't this one of Allison's horses?"

"No, Joe," Steve answered heavily. "He is from Allison's stables, but we have him to thank, just the same, along with Garry, for our blue prints and estimates. It was Mr. Devereau whom he brought up here last night and in fairly good time, I should judge, too, from the pace at which they set out. Garry turned him into the hill road, and he must have stuck to it blindly until he struck our fork." And, after a longer pause, "The horse is Miss Allison's own property," he added quietly.

Joe pursed his lips. Instantly at the mention of the girl's name he felt himself better equipped to understand both the lack of immediate action and the seeming preoccupied indifference of his superior which, in the face of the night's developments, would have been otherwise utterly unaccountable that morning.

The probable oorness of him who had gone bounding away empty handed from the lighted shack was of far less moment than the possible identity of the one who had furnished the inspiration of that night raid. And to Steve the need of assuring that tall girl with the vivid lips and coppery hair of Garry Devereau's safety bulked quite as important as did the advisability of seeking immediately an informal interview with Dexter Allison, such as the latter himself had so genially suggested.

"I happened to run into Harrigan this morning," Fat Joe said in an unconcerned manner.

As disinterestedly as had Joe, Steve now drained his coffee cup and waited.

"He was down to the cook shanty," Fat Joe rambled on. "It's an hour since he'd ought to have been out there with the powder squad in the north cut, and when I asks him if he was feelin' indisposed this morning he says no, but the supply teams was going out and one of the drivers had told him that I was sending him along to help with the loadin'. He had such a nice, frank, open faced way of lying that I couldn't bring myself to correct him. I just let it stand that way and told him such was the arrangement." Joe saw swift satisfaction play across Steve's face. "He had a bandage around his head not much different from this one our friend here is wearing. But he said he was scratched by a twig."

The room was very quiet for a breath. That thin note had crept into Fat Joe's tenor voice—thin and chill and menacing. And there as abruptly as he had assumed it he flung aside his mask of disingenuous irrelevance. Fat Joe wheeled, put both elbows upon the table edge and leaned forward heavily. It was much as though he were setting himself to shoulder by sheer weight through the discouraging wall of indifference behind which the other was apparently withdrawing once more.

"But as for me"—his high voice rang a little—"but as for me, well, I always did pride myself that I could shoot some, whether it was by daylight or dark!"

And the only result which that statement achieved was an answering, meditative nod. Fat Joe subsided. All that he could say had been said, and they finished breakfast as they had begun it, in absolute silence.

Stephen O'Mara touched a match to the dry grains of tobacco which he had been tamping into the bowl of his pipe. He swung slowly around toward the inert figure on the bunk.

"He'll sleep the day through. I think," he said, "and the night perhaps. But I'd advise you to look in on him now and then, just the same. He did us a good turn last night. It's the second good turn he's done for me, Joe. And now perhaps the chance has come to even up the score a little. You would know, wouldn't you, Joe, just how many drinks to prescribe for a man who has been as—as ill as Garry has?"

Fat Joe's face commenced to shine, and at that he was only beginning to understand.

"Ain't I the doctor?" he demanded aggrievedly. "You don't have to go no deeper into technicalities with me. And I told you last night anyway, didn't I, that it would have to be his last little celebration unless he was figurin' on a longer journey than he's ever took before. Well, I've handled so many cases just like his that there ain't even a little enjoyable novelty in 'em any more for me."

Steve received the statement with another nod.

"That's it," he mused. "That's it exactly. It would have to be his last unless he is figuring on a longer journey than he has ever taken before."

He crossed and leaned over the thin and motionless form of his friend. He laid one hand gently upon the sleeping man's shoulder.

"He did that for me once, Joe," he spoke quietly. "He dropped his hand on my shoulder like that, and I never forgot the weight of it. You watch him, Joe—watch him closely for awhile, because—because, you see, a man does stray along once in so often who's so badly bewildered and trail weary, so tired of trying and—and hurt in soul that the thought of such a journey as you speak of begins to seem the shortest route after all to an end of thoughts which even alcohol can't wipe out. You take care of him, and if he wakes before I get back explain to him a little just how he came here, and thank him a lot for what he did. Ask him to wait until I come back from Morrison, will you?"

For a moment Joe just stood and blinked, dumfounded.

"Huh!" he blurted at last. "Huh! So that's what you been hintin' at all the time, is it? I didn't just get you right until now. But do you know it did seem to me once or twice while we were working over him—once or twice when the goin' was pretty bad—that his spirit wasn't bearing real hearty into the traces. And, say, ain't that a poor idea for a guy to get into his head? Now, ain't it?" And then, as the purport of the rest of Steve's words struck home, "Do you mean you are going to Morrison to have a"—

Steve recrossed to the door and began to unfasten the feed bag from Ragtime's nose. He leaned over to lengthen a stirrup, stopped again to light his pipe.

"Watch things!" he called as he swung to the saddle and put Ragtime to the slope. "Watch things!" His voice drifted up from below clear and eager. "And drive 'em Joe—drive 'em—drive 'em from daylight till dark!"

From the threshold Fat Joe watched him until horse and rider disappeared beyond the line of timber.

Barbara Allison's presence upon the dusty hill road that morning was more than the result of a merely casual whim, even though when she turned her mount north into that mountain highway a scant two hours before the choice had been made without actual thought for the route she was selecting.

The night before as soon as she had re-entered hurriedly the glowing lodge a-sprawl upon the hill the impulse had first come to her—a swift and almost blind desire to turn and escape, if only for a little while, from the roomful of chatter, and laughter, and bright eyed badinage loosed upon her immediately after the unmasking by Dexter Allison's perfectly cadenced announcement of his daughter's engagement. All in a breath the huge room had become stiflingly oppressive, the gayety unbearable.

"He did that for me once, Joe," he spoke quietly.

And yet afterward, alone in her room, when the last treble note had died away and she had dismissed Celie, her sleepy eyed maid, the sense of oppression had returned redoubled. She did not want to sleep. She was glad of her wide eyed wakefulness, but in the darkness walls and ceiling and floor seemed fairly to close in upon her and hedge in soul and brain as well as body. It was the first time the girl had ever known the need—the driving desire—to be alone out of doors, where there was nothing but sky and skyline to bound her thoughts. And at last when her restlessness became no longer bearable, while the remainder of the house still slept behind drawn curtains, she rose and slipped into boots and breeches and riding coat and descended to order a not too wide awake groom to saddle a horse. And in the very middle of his sensational report of Ragtime's empty stall she swung to the saddle and turned toward the north.

Mile after mile, the roan mare placidly choosing the pace, she rode with one leg dangling over the pummel of the saddle, everything else forgotten in that preoccupied endeavor to review each moment she had shared with him.

When the higher morning sun found her far beyond the rolling pasture land, miles in the heavy timber, she had dismounted, there where the highest loop in the road commanded its breath taking sweep of country, and was sitting cross legged upon the trunk of a fallen tree at the road edge.

Then suddenly Stephen O'Mara in the flesh appeared before her astride Ragtime and leading her roan, which, contentedly cropping the bush tops, had disappeared a full quarter of an hour before.

The girl gasped at the suddenness of his coming. She half started to rise before she remembered the instability of her perch and then crouched even lower than before when she saw that he was not yet aware of her nearness. She waited, eyes gleefully bright, until he was almost opposite her before she coughed, ever so faintly. Then she tilted her nose aloft in enchanting mimicry of his lean and forward thrust face.

"We never speak," she confided dolefully to the empty air in front of her—"we never speak as we pass by."

He whirled. So swiftly that it took her breath she was out of the saddle and across the road and standing knee deep in the undergrowth beside her. Only his profile had been visible to her at first. Now the white line of his jaw and the light in the eyes that searched her face chilled her even as they sent the blood singing in every vein. Only a few hours before she had seen that same cold fear in Miriam Burrell's eyes, and yet not the same, either, for hers had been a panic of lost hope, and the gleam in the man's eyes was already only partly dread of disaster and partly a great and unmistakable glow of thankfulness. Barbara remembered then, with a twinge of guilt that she could have forgotten it so completely, the black robed figure that had gone thundering off on the same mount which Stephen O'Mara was riding now. She half lifted both hands to him apprehensively.

"You aren't going to tell me, are you," she asked, "that anything dreadful has happened to Garry?"

Dumbly, but most reassuringly, Steve shook his head. From the top of her hatless, wind tossed, brown crowned head to the tips of the absurdly small boots tucked up beneath her he scanned her slim body. Barbara realized that he was trying to speak and finding the effort hard. Slowly he removed his hat and passed one hand across his forehead.

"Man," he ejaculated fervidly to himself, "but that's the longest hundred yards you've ever traveled on foot or a-horseback!" and abruptly, accusingly to her, "Do you know that I've been months and years and ages rounding that bend to—to find you a little crumpled up heap in the road?"

"I'm sorry," she murmured humbly. "I'm sorry to—disappoint you; but, you see, I didn't know"—

She laughed at him. Her lips curled, petal-like, in a gurgling peal of enjoyment at his shamefaced grin.

"I found your horse rolling," he explained, and his gravity was dogged in the face of her brightness. "How I knew it was yours I don't know, but I did just the same. I thought she had thrown you. I'd already made up my mind, if there was one scratch on your body, to take that mare's head between my hands and break her neck! You see, I believed I knew—already just what it would mean to me if anything ever happened to you. But it's a lot different imagining the world without you—and—and facing the actual possibility of it. Was I—fairly tragic?"

CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE BEGINS RAILWAY INQUIRY

Proposed by President to Better Condition of Carriers.

MAY CHANGE PRESENT SYSTEM

Officials of Roads Prepared to Advocate Federal Incorporation, Supervision of Securities and Extension of Authority of Interstate Commerce Commission.

Washington, Nov. 20.—Ten members of Congress, five Senators and five members of the House of Representatives, began here today an inquiry into the subject of public control and supervision of railroads that may lead to the revolutionizing of the whole scheme of governmentst regulation of the country's transportation lines. Incidentally the committee is to look into the question of government ownership of railways, telephone and telegraph lines and express companies.

The members of the committee which will conduct this important investigation are Senator Newlands of Nevada, chairman; Senators Robinson of Arkansas, Underwood of Alabama, Cummins of Iowa and Brandegee of Connecticut, and Representatives Adamson of Georgia, Sims of Tennessee, Cullop of Indiana, Esch of Wisconsin and Hamilton of Michigan. The inquiry was recommended by President Wilson in his message to Congress in December of last year. He described as its purpose to determine what could be done "for hettering the conditions under which the railroads are operated and for making them more useful servants of the country as a whole."

Prominent Men as Witnesses.

In order to obtain the views of all interests affected by the operations of the transportation lines the committee has invited prominent shippers, bankers, representatives of commercial organizations, railway executives, economists and others to appear before them.

The first to be heard are railroad commissioners of various states who began their evidence today. Their testimony is directed chiefly to opposing any enlargement of the federal authority over commerce that would detract from the powers now exercised by state bodies. They will be followed shortly by officials of railway labor organizations who are expected to register their opposition to the increase of governmental authority over wages and conditions of labor.

Chief interest in the hearings centers in the proposals that will be put forward by representatives of the railroads, for it is reported that they will advocate an extension of federal authority over rates and securities to the practical exclusion of state control of these matters. It is understood also that they will go on record in favor of federal incorporation of all railroad lines.

Legislative Program of Railroads.

From an authoritative source is obtained the following outline of the legislative program which the railroads will ask the committee to consider in its investigation: They will endeavor to demonstrate to the commission that one of the principal defects in the present system of railroad regulation is the lack of coordination resulting from the simultaneous and conflicting regulation by the federal government and by the 48 states. They will, therefore, ask that entire governmental control of the rates and practices of interstate carriers, except purely local matters, be placed in the hands of a federal body so that interstate traffic may be regulated without reference to state lines, leaving to the state commissions jurisdiction only over local matters and local public utilities. As a part of this plan, a compulsory system of federal incorporation is to be recommended, accompanied by federal supervision of railroad stock and bond issues.

A reorganization of the Interstate Commerce Commission will be asked. In order to enable the commission properly to exercise its increased powers. It is also proposed that the preparation and prosecution of cases against the railroads shall be delegated to some other agency of the government, possibly the Department of Justice, so that the commission may devote its energies to its administrative functions.

With the commission thus relieved of some of its present duties and equipped to handle its business more promptly, the railroads will urge that the period during which the commission may now suspend proposed increases in rates be reduced from ten months to 60 days, with provision for reparation to be paid to the shippers if the advance shall be declared unreasonable.

They will also ask that the commission be given the power to prescribe minimum as well as maximum rates so that in meeting complaints of discrimination the commission may order the advance of a rate which it considers too low.

One of the most important recommendations for which the railroads will ask favorable consideration is that the commission be specifically authorized to take into account in rate regulation the effect of rates upon total earnings in the light of expenses.

While the Newlands Committee is required, under the resolution creating it, to submit a report by January 2 next, it is not anticipated that the Committee will have come anywhere near completing its labors then.

LIZZIE EXPOSED TO NIGHT AIR

JOY RIDERS DESERT HER NEAR CHURCH DOOR

W. E. Byers Quite Indignant Over Treatment Accorded His Ford Car.

W. E. Byers lost his Lizzie, Monday night—just long enough to realize the crushing weight of his loss and then—he found it, in the alley alongside the Baptist church. We wouldn't blame Will if he had lost his goat as well, as it was certainly annoying, to say the least.

Someone or several broke the lock on the barn used as a garage by Joe Cooper on Antrim street and took the car out the back way for a joy ride, sometime in the wee, sma' hours. They evidently joy rode most of the night, as investigation disclosed that upwards of two gallons of gas had been used up. Mr. Byers had filled the tank and prepared the car that afternoon for a trip into the country Tuesday.

Evidently the midnight roisterers lacked the nerve to approach too close to the scene of their crime on the return trip, and so slipped up the convenient alley, where it was possible to leave Lizzie without being observed. Byers reported his loss to the sheriff Tuesday morning, but before Novak could get out on the trail the car was found.

Art Fitch, Lyman Benton, Colonel Hamilton, Charles See, Hugh Ackert, Art Alcox and O. D. Hammond returned from the hunting grounds with their trophies Wednesday morning. Everybody got a deer but our genial county clerk who had bad luck this trip.

A THANKSGIVING OF LONG AGO

"THE fondest memory I cherish is of my boyhood Thanksgiving," said Chauncey M. Depew, "and, although Thanksgivings may be now just the same as they were then, they do not seem the same to me—not by a long shot.

"When I was a lad I lived at Peekskill upon a farm, our country estate and the same which now belongs to me. We awoke on Thanksgiving day at early dawn and were up dancing and singing with glee. There were to be no gifts, of course, but the house was full of company, who were with us to spend the day, and that fact, together with the presence of about a dozen little cousins, made the Depew boys and girls very early risers and merry from the minute the sun awoke.

"My father and mother were very strict. They did not think Thanksgiving a day for ploy or merriment of any sort until one had been to church and given thanks. So my mother always got up early to keep us 'hushed up,' and my father also arose to be sure that we did not do any laughing. We always had a good breakfast.

"WE ALL BUNDLED INTO A GREAT SLEIGH."

"Then come church time! And into a great sleigh we all bundled. It seems to me now that we had snow earlier in those days, for I can remember being stowed away under the robes like a little animated mommy not expected to see light until unveiled at the end of the journey. There always was a very long church service, and poor mother employed all her time comforting or frowning upon us as the occasion seemed to demand. After a time church was out. Then came the dinner and the fun. For in the old time Thanksgiving celebrations the whole character of the day changed after church, and what had before been the strictest Sunday conduct became as riotous as the revelers could make it.

"Oh, what a dinner we had! I think now we must have been very rich folk to afford so much. In those days no one had course dinners. And the table was 'set' when the family filed into the room, and the center of the feast was turkey—nothing but turkey.

"After dinner came the dessert. This always consisted of thirteen different kinds of pie. I used to eat all thirteen, and my father was proud of me for it. If anything happened so that I could not get beyond the twelfth kind of pie father rallied me upon growing weak and mother looked anxious for my health. I can see those triangles of pie now. There was mince, of course. Then came pumpkin, apple, custard, cocoanut, lemon, prune, blackberry (canned), dried peach and several others, winding up with cranberry. It was a great treat for us boys, who never at any other time in the year really had all the pie we could eat. After dinner we sat down quietly in the parlor and my grandmother told us stories. We were, ourselves, quite too full for utterance. Surely too full for play.

"But the sequel to Thanksgiving day was most interesting of all. It followed on Thanksgiving night, just like a Nemesis. And its program was this: When it came time for all to go to bed my mother would call us children in the pantry, and then came the little dose which was to counteract all bad effects of the overstuffing process. My dose was always castor oil. And well I remember how it was prepared. First into the cup went a great deal of molasses. Then came a spoonful of the oil. Then more molasses. This I had to drink. Since then I have spent many Thanksgiving days, but I never enjoyed any as well as those—except the castor oil afterward."

Getting Put Off.

"I caught the street car conductor who owes me money on the car platform last night."

"Did you get your money?"

"No; he did the same thing my other creditors do."

"What's that?"

"Put me off."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

DRY NATION IS NOT FAR AWAY

TWENTY-FIVE OF FORTY-EIGHT STATES NOW DRY

Over Eighty Per Cent of Nation Now Without Saloons and More Coming Next Year.

The great American desert is growing by leaps and bounds, until it is now predicted that within less than 10 years there will not be an oasis in it. Last week's election added to this desert a total of four states with an aggregate land area of 357,458 square miles, and also the territory of Alaska, with its area of nearly 500,000 square miles. Last week's election also probably added two more states to this area, and they have an aggregate land area of 137,045 square miles, making a total added land area to the desert of nearly 1,000,000 square miles.

This great American desert is made to grow as a result of the great wave of opposition to the liquor traffic, which is sweeping not only all of America but all of Europe and the world as well. Maine was the first state to adopt prohibition away back in 1851, and the law still stands. Immediately following Maine a large number of other states adopted the principle, only to drop it after a time. Among these was Michigan. Maine stuck to prohibition, however, and once more the wave seems to be rising, until it is likely Maine will some day enforce her prohibitory law and will with all the rest of the nation be really dry.

Four Added to Dry List.

Until last week's election there were 19 out of 49 states of the Union that were dry. Four more states voted in favor of prohibition, making a total of 23 of the 48 states now in the dry column. But last Tuesday two more states elected state officials and legislatures on dry platforms, so it is presumed these states will during the winter go dry by law, making the score stand 25 states dry and 23 wet, or a majority of the states of the Union dry.

The states which went dry last Tuesday were Michigan, Montana, Nebraska and South Dakota. Florida elected a minister as governor on a dry platform as opposed to another candidate running on a wet platform. Utah elected a dry legislature.

Arid Area is Vast.

According to the statistics the 48 states of the Union have a total land area of 2,973,890 square miles. The total land area of the states which have now voted to become dry including the four which voted last week and excluding Florida and Utah is 1,562,162 square miles. Add this to the land area of 1,699,207 square miles.

But these figures of dry territory do not include the territory that is dry by local option. Including this the dry territory will be found to cover over 80 per cent of the United States.

And over 65 per cent the population is now living in dry territory—this, of course, including that portion voted dry last week.

As the desert now stands one may go from the Atlantic to the Pacific and never step foot on wet territory. He may go from the Gulf of Mexico to the Canadian border and choke to death all the way. He may go from the Gulf of California in the extreme southwestern portion of the United States to the Canadian border and never get a drink. He may go from the Gulf of Mexico to Puget Sound and never require rubber boots. He may go in almost a direct line from the northern to the southern boundaries of the nation and right through the middle of it and not see a saloon, and south of the Mason and Dixon line he must watch his step if he wants to find a place where he may get a drink.

When Florida has enacted her prohibitory law the only states in the south that will be wet will be Louisiana, Texas, New Mexico, Kentucky and Missouri. Even that may not be true for Texas has already voted to submit a prohibitory amendment and the great Lone Star state may soon join the rest of the south in putting the ban on booze. The greater portions of the states of Texas, Kentucky and Louisiana are now dry by local option.

See Prohibition Coming.

The liquor interests are expecting the nation to be dry very soon. They expect a national prohibition amendment to be passed by the congress very soon. During the Democratic National convention in St. Louis last June, the great throng of delegates and others there were surprised when they stepped up to a bar to have the bar tender urge them to try Bevo rather than to ask them, "what will you have." During the week there, the newspaper correspondents from all over the country were invited to go out to Grant farm, the beautiful home of August Busch, nf the Anheuser Busch Brewing company. There they saw all the blankets on the horses marked "Bevo." Mr. Busch was asked why this great brewing company was pushing bevo to the exclusion of the beer he manufactured.

"We have seen prohibition coming," was his response. "For 10 years we have had our chief chemist and our head brewmeister experimenting to find a drink that looks like beer, tastes like beer and yet which has no alcohol in it. In Bevo we have found it. We can ship this into dry states. It is not a violation of the prohibitory laws. The federal government has placed its O. K. upon it as non-alcoholic. We expect national prohibition to come very soon. We are ready for it. We can't afford to close up all the property we own in the United States. Now we are ready. It may come any time now."

Missouri voted on prohibition last week but went heavily against it, California did the same thing, probably largely because of the wine industry ont on the coast. But the prohibitionists have their eyes on other states where the chances are good for carrying the principles so it is not unlikely that a great majority of the states will soon be dry.

But in addition to the 23 states now dry and in addition to the four states that voted dry last week, the territory of Alaska had a great dry majority on that day when prohibition was the great matter voted upon there. Alaska has a total area of 590,884 square miles, or more than one-sixth the total area of the United States on the North American continent. Its population is but 654,356 but these will hereafter live in the desert.

Fight in New States.

The dry leaders are already making plans for bringing the fight in 1917 for constitutional prohibition in Ohio, Kentucky, Illinois, Minnesota, Wisconsin and Indiana. The drys assert that the only doubtful state in this group is Ohio, and they believe they can win this state the next time.

THANKSGIVING IS "OLD HOME" DAY

IT is well to hark back now snd then to the old days and the old ways. Thanksgiving day in the beginning was a New England holidsy. It is only of late years that it has been domesticated in the rest of the country and made a federal observance.

Ex-Secretary of the Navy John D. Long in a reminiscent article told how the Pilgrims celebrated it. He wrote:

A man must bave been born in a New Englsnd village more than a generstion ago to know the full old time flavor of Thanksgiving day. Then was the day of the "old home." Then families were large. Flocks of boys and girls were in evidence and filled the half dozen or more scattered schoolhouses which since then have become so depopulated that most of them have been abandoned, and the vastly diminished number of successors of former crowds of scholars are carted back and forth in a single omnibus to some more pretentious structure at the village center. Then holidays were rare. New Year's day and Washington's birthday and even Christmas, still under the blight of the old Puritan protest, were for the most part unobserved. Fast day had no significance in the way of its recognition, except possibly a sermon or, if the snow was off the ground, a game of ball. The Fourth of July was an outdoor celebration, often as quiet as a Sunday after the old swivel had been fired off at sunrise.

The crowning festival of the year was Thanksgiving—the festival of the fireside—when the apples and pumpkins had been gathered, when the early snowflakes had fallen and when grandfather and grandmother and Uncle Isaac and Aunt Betsy were invited to dinner, and any boy who had strayed away to an occupation elsewbere came back with the appetite of a hound and burst in at the kitchen door with a shout and got the hearty home greeting. It was, "Hello, mother"—nobody then said "mamma"—and, "Well, if that ain't you, Sam!" Then the "beef critter" had been killed and his quarters stored for the winter's only supply of fresh meat. The hog that had grunted all summer in his pen and grown fat had gone under the butcher's knife; sonse and sausage had sent their appetizing odor through the house, and the pork barrel was full. "Mother" and "the girls"—there were no servants—for days previous had been making marvelous constructions of mince and apple and pumpkin pies. The turkey flanked one end of the table and a huge chicken pie the other. The small boy, already gorged, when his aunt slyly asked him which kind of pie he would have, as if he could have but one, timidly but eagerly answered back, "All three."

ROCK ELM SCHOOL NOTES

The regular meeting of the Liberty Bell Bird club, which occured at the close of school Friday afternoon, was well attended. The subject for discussion was the winter feeding of birds. A flock of quails has been seen near the school grounds and plans were laid for providing them a shelter and feeding them this winter.

Another interesting feature of the meeting was the opportunity to see and feed a little song sparrow which Alva Duffey and Frank Lawton found, wet and chilled, as they were going home from school Thursday night. Frank took it home with him and cared for it that night and took it to school with him Friday morning. The little thing seemed to know that it was among friends and would eat the crumbs which the children fed it while they were watching it.

There will be no school from Wednesday noon of this week until Monday of next week.

IN THE TENEMENTS.

Thanksgiving Brings Good Cheer, and Kiddies Understand Day.

The spirit of Thanksgiving penetrates not only the attics and tenements of the poor of the big cities, but many dwellings of the sick and unfortunate. In the great hospitals the kiddies in the convalescent wards have a real Thanksgiving dinner, and as a member of a hospital staff said:

"Most of them are thankful they're in the hospital on Thanksgiving day. It's the best place for them. If they were at home they'd be miserable and lonesome probably. In the hospital there are other children about with whom they can celebrate."

In practically all of the Settlement houses the harvest feast is enjoyed, whatever the nationality of the "neighbors." No little Italian or Pole but learns the joy of "turkey day." One wonders sometimes just what the vision may be in the innermost recesses of Tony's little soul, but there is no hesitation in his manner as he answers:

"Please, teacher, Thanksgiving is the day what my mother gets a turkey by the church. It is to be thankful to the Lord for the things we're thankful for."

It took a public schoolteacher to explain the glibness of these little foreign tongues.

"Why, of course," she said, "they learn the story of Thanksgiving almost before they can speak English. They have pictures of the pilgrims and the Indians, harvest fields and pumpkins and corn and turkeys. Well, I don't suppose they ever saw pumpkins growing or have any conception of what harvest means to the farmers, but they're clever little things. They have some kind of vision of something good. It's wonderful how quickly they acquire a veneer of American ideas. It's only a veneer, and it's pretty thin in places but it gets them through."

World's Highest Auto Road.

The world's highest automobile road and one of the most remarkable pieces of road building on record has just been completed in Colorado. The new highway runs to the very top of Pikes peak, whose crest is more than 14,000 feet high.

The man who discovered Pikes peak said that it would never be climbed. Today the topmost point is accessible for seven passenger touring cars. The new road is eighteen miles long, and in that distance it rises 8,000 feet. The engineering is so skillfully done that the average grade is only 6 per cent—a rise of six feet in every 100—and the maximum grade does not exceed 10 per cent. The road is never less than twenty feet wide, and around some of the sharper curves is as much as fifty feet. Guard rails at the more dangerous edges reassure the nervous driver. There is a system of auto supply stations and water stations along the whole road, which is also followed by a telephone line.

To blast out the new highway, running for much of its length through almost solid rock, fifteen carloads of dynamite were necessary. So carefully was the work carried on that not a single laborer was injured in the blasting.

PUBLIC SERVICE TRUE TO NAME

AVAILABLE TO ALL WAGE EARNERS AND EMPLOYES

The United States Employment Service and Its Work for the Employer and Employee.

In 1913 congress passed an act creating the department of labor. The purpose of this department is set forth in the following words of congress: "To foster, promote and develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States and increase their opportunities for profitable employment." A natural outgrowth of the development of this new department has been the creation of what is now known as the United States employment service, which is available to all residents of the United States, citizen or alien. It is a service for the public and is free to both employer and employee. The country has been divided into 18 districts or zones, with headquarters offices in each zone and such sub-offices as are found advisable. The result is that there are now 80 free employment offices operated by the federal government, located at the important industrial centers of the United States. These offices are conducted both on the mail and personal plan, and any employer or employee, no matter where living, can use these offices, the former to secure help as may be needed, and the latter to secure needed employment, without expense to either. The post offices were made local depositories where the employer can secure, upon demand, order blanks for help, and the employee application blank for employment, both of which will be transmitted by the postmaster to the proper headquarters office without expense.

A Distinctive Feature.

The headquarters of zone No. 10, comprising Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, and Wisconsin, was established at Chicago, Illinois. This office has striven for efficiency throughout, and as a result has become known as one of the most important employment offices in the United States. It has the distinction of establishing the first public teachers agency, known as the Teachers and Professional Service Division. This division finds competent persons for educational work throughout the United States in rural schools, graded schools, high schools, colleges and universities. The work was planned with a view to efficiency, thus effectively participating in the "Better Schools" movement. A careful investigation is made of all applicants, and only those who can show a satisfactory record as to character, training, and efficiency, are recommended for reported vacancies. All school officers interested in filling their schools with the best teachers obtainable will find this office a valuable aid in this direction. Private persons desiring tutors or governesses will also find the service unsurpassed. Blanks used in this work can be had only from the Chicago office.

Where to Apply.

There are four offices in this zone: 845 South Wabash avenue, Chicago, Illinois; Federal building, Indianapolis, Indiana; Larned and Griswold street, Detroit, Michigan; Federal building, Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan. All of these offices are prepared to handle orders for miscellaneous help of all kinds, skilled or unskilled. Two offices, Chicago, Illinois, and Indianapolis, Indiana, have a separate women and girls division, in charge of competent women and having the co-operation of women's organizations throughout the United States, both local and national. The office at Chicago has also a separate division for young men and boys. These divisions assist young men and women in securing employment, and also offer vocational guidance. Persons desiring to correspond with these offices should address the United States Employment Service at their nearest office as shown above. If you desire to call in person the office hours are from 9 a. m. to 4:30 p. m.

The United States Employment Service offers its assistance to all residents of the United States. If you are an employer in need of help or a worker in need of employment, write to your nearest office and state your case fully. You will be given every consideration to the end that your needs may be supplied, and no fee of any kind will be charged. Farmers will find these offices of much benefit in securing the farm help they may need, either experienced or inexperienced, married or single.

Practical Economy

Baking powders made from alum or phosphate may be bought for a trifle less than Royal Baking Powder, which is made from cream of tartar, derived from grapes.

Alum powders are not only cheap, but they differ greatly in leavening power.

If a cheap baking powder is used for a fine cake and the cake turns out a failure there is a waste of costly materials worth more than a whole can of the cheap baking powder.

Royal Baking Powder produces the finest food, and its use therefore, results in an actual saving.

READJUSTMENT OF POSTAL RATES

ONE CENT LETTER POSTAGE MAY BECOME UNIVERSAL

Postal Committees Besieged By Petitions Bearing Hundreds of Signatures Urging Change

The ways are now being greased for the launching of the movement for the readjustment of postal rates in the next session of congress. This problem was to have been taken up in the last session but had to be deferred on account of the consideration required by railway mail pay. Since this has been disposed of the committees are prepared to take up the matter of placing the various postal rates on a more equitable basis.

A zone system of rates for second class matter is being prominently urged to take the place of the present flat rate which was adopted nearly 40 years ago. The present rate has for some time been regarded as a discrimination against the newspapers in favor of the great national magazines. Like the parcel post the proposed zone rates would be based on the length of the haul.

The postal committees have been besieged by petitions bearing millions of names and several hundred thousand letters from individuals urging a readjustment of postal rates with a view of making possible one cent letter postage. A survey of the situation indicates that sufficient changes will be made in the various rates to permit the granting of a 1 cent rate on local delivery letters in the next session of congress.

Chairman Moon of the house postal committee, today said: "I think that the committee will take up this second class mail matter at the next session and press it to a conclusion at once. While I cannot speak for the committee, this is my desire in the matter. I do not know what kind of a bill we will pass, whether it will have a zone feature attached to it or not. This view has been presented frequently in years past, and sometimes received favor and sometimes not. As to what shape the legislation will be in I am not able to say, but I am sure the committee will give it the best possible shape in the public interest."

Senator Townsend, of Michigan, prominent member of the senate postal committee could not be reached today but it is generally understood that he is in favor of remodeling the postal laws so as to place the rates of postage on a more equitable basis. He is understood to have stated recently that if such a readjustment were made it would be possible to reduce letter postage even below 1 cent per ounce.

Congressman Frank D. Scott, of Michigan, says: "The post office department was created to offer the very best possible service to the public at a minimum cost and is not supposed to produce any more revenue than is actually needed to pay the running expenses. Legislation needed to create a 1 cent rate on drop letters should be passed without further delay; it will cost the government no money and it will act as a much needed stimulant to business. With every reduction in the letter rate there has immediately followed a tremendous increase in the volume of mail thereby taking care of any possible loss in revenue."

There will be a dance at the Ironton Grange hall December 8, Friday evening. All are invited. Adv. 48t1

CONGREGATIONAL TERCENTENARY

REV. C. E. TAGGART DELIVERS INSPIRING ADDRESS

On Subject, "The Tercentenary Program of the Coogregatiooal Churches of the U. S."

Rev. C. E. Taggart delivered a very inspiring address last Sunday morning, taking for his subject "The Tercentenary Program of the Congregational Churches of the United States."

It is proposed that the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth Rock in 1620 shall be commemorated in a manner worthy of the ideals and purposes of the Pilgrim fathers, who established the early churches which constitute the beginning of Congregationalism in America.

The Tercentenary program extends over a period of five years and closes with a celebration at Plymouth in the fall of 1920.

Following is briefly the program in which the Charlevoix church voted to participate:

First—Pilgrim conviction applied.

Second—A half million new members.

Third—A large number of recruits for life tasks.

Fourth—An annual giving rate of $2,000,000 (two million dollars for missions.)

Fifth—A great permanent memorial fund, the income of which shall be applied to some object worthy of the Pilgrims.

ADDITIONAL LOCALS

Regular services will be held at the Congregational church Sunday, both afternoon and evening.

Will Finucan is expected home today from Cheboygan to spend Thanksgiving with his parents.

Mrs. G. W. Priest, who has been visiting in Detroit and other southern Michigan points for the past six weeks, returned to her home in this city the latter part of the week.

The annual meeting of the Ladies' Aid society of the Congregational church will be held with Mrs. C. E. Taggart, on Wednesday, December 6. All members please be present.

Mrs. Charles See gave a potluck supper for a number of her friends Friday evening. Though the weather was bad a good turn out was reported and the affair proved an enjoyable one.

A gang of workmen are busily engaged in placing the heavy steel girders for the new garage being erected by Benj. Brown. The garage will be one of the best in this section of the state when completed.

Douglas Nettleton and Harley Oehs returned Friday night from Grand Rapids, where they have been taking the state board of pharmacy examinations. They report that same were pretty stiff.

Dar Meech, Harry Mohrmann and Ed Chaloupka, of Charlevoix, returned this morning from the north woods with Judge Harris and party from Ellsworth. We have not learned what luck they had as yet.

William Mayberry returned last week from the hunting grounds near Newberry with a doe. Bill got a dandy shot at a big buck, but forgot to load his gun when he left camp and Mr. Buck got away with a whole skin. Herb Wakefield, who came back with him, also got a doe.

DEACON PEPPER'S TURKEY

could buy the turkey," she told herself remorsefully.

"There, Em," she said cheerfully, "that's the best Thanksgiving dinner I ever ate in my life!"

While her mother was taking her after dinner nap Em cleared away the dinner dishes and afterward went up the hill to the locust grove. She was heartsick and weary, and she threw herself down on the dead leaves and, putting her hands to her face, sobbed softly.

From the Pepper homestead came strains of music. There was the sound of laughter and presently a man's voice singing "Annie Laurie." Long years ago young Deacon Pepper—Ned Pepper—had sung that song to Em Tatem, but she had been shy and cold, and somehow Ned had felt rebuffed and drifted away to singe his wings at other flames.

"I want ta tell yau samething, Deacon Pepper."

"I wonder what he would say if he knew I was a thief, and I've got to tell him," whispered Em to herself.

A step sounded on the frozen ground and a big bronzed man with troubled gray eyes leaned over the fence and looked down at poor Em Tatem.

"Em," he ventured after awhile.

Em jumped up, her blue eyes drowned in tears. "Ned—Ned Pepper!" she cried in a frightened tone. Then, suddenly recovering herself, she said in a frozen voice:

"I want to tell you something, Deacon Pepper—no—no—please don't interrupt me. You missed your big turkey, didn't you?"

He nodded. "It disappeared."

"You don't know where it went!" she declared tragically.

"Oh, but I did, Em," he corrected her.

"I stole it, and I came up here to confess to you"—

"You needn't say a word unless you want to, Em," he interrupted quickly. "I happened to be up repairing the arm on the windmill, and I had my field-glasses along. I always like to glimpse the distant view when I'm up on the tower, and I happened to be looking through the glasses when—when the turkeys—went up to you—and the gobbler didn't come back again; so I knew that you had it, Em, and I guessed you needed it badly; so the instant you took him I made you a present of him; so he was yours after all!"

Em poured out the story of the delayed dividends and of their plaching poverty and how she had stolen the turkey for her mother. "I couldn't touch a morsel of it," she shuddered.

Ned listened and offered to write to the gas company concerning her mother's stock. He was a director in the Donaldsville bank, and his name would give weight to the inquiry.

"You are too good to me," faltered Em, looking very pretty and animated with the pink in her thin cheeks.

"I couldn't be too good to you, Emmy," he said soberly, his eyes fixed on the distant horizon. "If I'd had my way years ago all that I had would be yours. I wish you had cared enough."

"Ned," she protested in a frightened tone, "I did care—always. I thought you didn't."

Ned's eyes flashed dangerously.

"Then—he—lied!" he growled. And at the wonderment in her eyes he added, "Some one who is dead now told me that you couldn't care for me, and I—fool—believed!"

There was a long silence. Ned stared straight ahead. Em's careworn face had lost its anxious lines.

"Em," he pleaded, "it isn't too late now, is it?"

"It's never to late to be happy!" she whispered softly.

Mrs. Tatem is never tired of telling that the big bronze turkey was Deacon Pepper's engagement present to Emmy. And Emmy and her husband always exchange understanding smiles.

Slippery Roadway and Bent Radius Rod Cause of Accident On Dixon Avenue.

What might easily have been a fatal accident occurred last Saturday afternoon, when Dr. Allan Wilkinson, returning from a call at the U. S. supply depot, climbed the curb with his Ford car on Dixon avenue, smashing into a telephone pole, demolishing the car and cutting himself badly about the head, so that several stitches were necessary.

It seems that during the storm early Friday morning the doctor, while making a call on the south side, miscalculated slightly, and bumped into the curb, bending the car's radius rod considerably. Saturday afternoon's accident was indirectly the result of the doctor's previous collision with the curbing. The car skidded slightly on the slippery roadway and not realizing that his radius rod was so badly bent, he swerved too sharply towards the side of the road in trying to correct the skidding motion and at the same time inadvertently pulled open the throttle. The car, consequently, jumped the curb and tried to climb the pole, with the aforesaid painful and expensive results. The doctor says it was certainly some narrow escape.

AN OPPORTUNITY FOR YOUNG MEN

Send the Boys to the Stock Show December 1 to 9.

Send the boys to Chicago the first week of December. Considering the nominal investment it will be money put in a place where it will yield substantial returns.

Keeping the boy on the farm is one of the agricultural problems of the hour. The lure of the railroad and the factory is hard to resist. Even the bright lights beckon. The youth of the period needs broader environment. It should be awakened to the possibilities of agricultural development and no better arena for observation could be desired than the International Live Stock Exposition.

Give your boy an opportunity to get away from the contracted horizon to which he is confined under normal conditions. Let him know what the master minds in live stock and agriculture are doing or contemplating. Let the youth of the country have an opportunity to realize that the period of excess food production has become a chapter of history and that remunerative prices for everything the soil can be coaxed to yield are assured.

The International Live Stock Exposition affords a lesson in maximum profits at minimum cost. In that sphere the most successful feeders and breeders of live stock in this North American continent display their wares and mutely but eloquently tell how it is done, furnishing the rising generation with inspiration and assurance of success.

"Knowing how" is one of the secrets of success in any sphere of endeavor. Give the boy this equipment and he has been furnished with a long start along the highway to affluence. It is capital you cannot furnish him in the process of dividing your estate.

Send your boy to the "International" this year, during the first week in December. Next season he will not be a willing absentee if he has in him the material for an up-to-date farmer and live stock raiser. Special reduced rates on all eastern and some western railroads.

To Those Who Think.

All the world is one great brotherhood and when Jesus taught his disciples to pray, "Thy Kingdom Come," the Divine seed was sown which must inevitably ripen into that glorious day, when the principles of true brotherhood will rule the world.

Our civilization today consist largely of movements and countermovements whose sum total determine the status of brotherhood in the present age.

The church is God's true mean to the end of establishing forever His kingdom among men.

She was organized, commissioned and sent forth to serve, and that service must be all of love.

She has bravely fought her battles in every century.

On every battle field of human history the print of Her bleeding feet is indelibly set.

The centuries tell the tale of Her increasing conflict.

Has she failed? Yes and no. When we look at Her locally, divided, corrupted with evil and unholy practices, teaching doctrines of men for doctrines divine, following the way of the world and missing so far the true way of God. In view of the great world need, being served rather than serving. We say, surely that if after all these centuries She brings us no more than this, truely She has failed, and too under the cloud of Bleeding Eurasia rent from center to circumference with wars, darkest despair. Gasping we stand and again admit She has failed.

Had Her membership been God's rather than human beings, we might well pen a different story, but in this the bulk of it all may be clearly seen —"Tis human to error."

She has not failed. God's purpose may be hindered, even deferred, but it can not be defeated.

She but waits for a new birth.

Next week I shall continue this writing and will speak at length on "The New Birth of the Church."

Yours for Service,
LLOYD C. VINYARD.

OVERCOME BY GAS FUMES

DEATH CAME IN PECULIAR MANNER TO A. I. CLOVER

Fell Into Bath Tub After Being Overcome by Deadly Fumes—Formerly Lived Here.

A. I. Clover, a son of Mrs. Lillian E. Brown, and well known in this vicinity, died in a very sad and peculiar manner last Thursday morning at his home in Detroit.

On the morning of his death Mrs. Brown awakened the young man at an early hour and he went into the bathroom to dress. His mother was called into the front part of the grocery store which she conducts and over which she lived with her son, who is a conductor on one of the Detroit street railway lines.

When she returned to the apartments, she heard a groan and knocking at the bathroom door, asked what was the matter, but received no answer. Becoming frightened at this, she threw herself against the door which was locked and succeeded in breaking it in. She found her son lying full length in the tub, with his head and shoulders partially under the water, but still gasping for breath. Fumes of gas filled the room from an instantaneous heater which the boy had turned on to heat the water for his bath, but had evidently neglected to light. She managed to get him out of the tub and summon medical assistance. A physician came and all possible efforts were used to resusticate the unfortunate victim, but without avail.

To discover the exact cause for his death, the gas heater was again turned on and the doctor and Charles McGeagh, who was present, remained in the room, closing the door. They were obliged to leave the room very quickly, being almost overcome with the fumes. The experiment left no doubt as to the cause of the sad affair. Overpowered by the gas, he had partially lost consciousness and toppled over in the tub, submersion in the water filling his lungs and rendering the case a hopeless one.

This young man, just turning his twentieth year, had long been the main dependence of his mother and his loss comes as a terrible shock to her. All who knew him will admit that a life of great usefulness and capabilities for good has been lost to us through the selection of a strange and inscrutable providence.

The body was brought to this city and the funeral was held Sunday at three p. m., from the home of James McCeagh, an uncle of the deceased, on Dixon avenue, Rev. Quinton Walker officiating. Interment was in Brookside.

HIGHWAY DEPT. FOR PEARSON

WILL BE A CANDIDATE NEXT SPRING

Reported to Have Backing of Many Republican Leaders.

The next state highway commissioner may be William J. Pearson, of Boyne Falls, says the Petoskey Evening News. At the spring convention in 1917 each party will nominate a candidate to succeed Commissioner Rodgers.

Mr. Pearson is understood to have the backing of Wayne county, and this, with his large acquaintance all over the state, makes him a formidable candidate. With years of experience in road building and a thorough understanding of conditions all over the state, his candidacy would be enthusiastically received.

Mr. Pearson has made no formal announcement, but will probably outline his intentions in the near future.

This is the second election for this office in Michigan. The first was held in April, 1913, the term of office being for four years. Prior to 1913 the state highway commissioner was appointed by the governor.

WEDDING CAME AS SURPRISE TO FRIENDS

Well Known Charlevoix Man Married Nov. 20 at Centralia, Ill.

Cyrenius Beers, Jr., a young man well known in this city, and Miss Cora L. Walker, a school teacher of Centralia, Illinois, were married in that city on Monday, November 20th. After the ceremony the young couple left for Chicago, where they spent a week before coming to Charlevoix. They are now residing on the Waller farm.

Though it was generally known that they were to be married, the exact date was known only to a few and the wedding came as a surprise to their many friends, with whom we join in wishing them all kinds of good luck and happiness.

DIDN'T APPRECIATE HIS BEDFELLOW

LOCAL DOCTOR AROUSED BY VICIOUS COMPANION

Midnight Dreams Interrupted By Hungry Rodent Who Fastens Teeth In His Neck.

A rather unique and painful experience came to Dr. Will Mitchell last Friday morning as he lay asleep in his room just before daybreak.

The doctor was awakened by a real "pain in the neck" and his wild grab in the darkness brought his hand in fearsome contact with something soft and furry that started violently to squeak, squeal and wriggle. Being neither able nor desirous of investigating the identity of his nocturnal visitor more closely, he flung it in the general direction of the window and then got up and turned on the light. But nothing could be seen. It was certainly not a nightmare, because there was the painful laceration on his neck to convince Doc that something had really bitten him. It seems that his over friendly visitor was a rat, who had entered at the open window and included the doctor's bed in his itinerary about the room.

The wound was dressed immediately by Dr. Armstrong and is doing nicely. Dr. Mitchell confesses that the affair was quite a shock to his nerves.

CHRISTMAS SAVING CLUB

at the

Charlevoix State Savings Bank

for the year 1916 closes a very successful year.

Checks will be mailed by the bank to its members of this past year's club on December 11th, which will aggregate about $4,000.

The Christmas Savings Club for next year or 1917 will start and be open for membership December 18, 1916, and many of the old members and their friends are anxious to again join the new club.

With the prevailing high prices of food stuff and all necessities, the insurance and taxes to meet this season of the year and the coal bins to fill, the money that will be distributed next week will be a nice thing just before Christmas for its many members.

The sure way to have your share next year again is to start with the new club on December 18th, this month, when the new club for 1917 starts.

The officers and directors of the Charlevoix State Savings Bank, are much pleased as well as the members with the success of the club for the past year.

A Good Bean Crop.

McClure & Nicloy threshed the largest bean crop yield per acre with their splendid new "Case" bean thresher last Friday on the Hemingway farm near Ironton.

George McMulkin has charge of the farming operations and states that the bean field contained exactly six acres, which threshed out 130 bushels machine measure. They were the cleanlest beans that have been threshed in this locality this fall.

There will be a dance and box social at the Maple Grove Grange hall on Wednesday evening, December 13. Good music and a fine time promised. A quilt will be given away free. You are invited.

Michigan's New Governor And Some Of His Policies

Mr. Sleeper was elected governor without a set political speech, merely making occasionally a "talk" of two or three minutes.

He made no political promises and had no paid workers.

Says he owes his election to old friends in all parts.

Declares an organization of friends is better than a machine or than spell-binding speeches.

Sleeper, trained to hard work, has been known from young manhood throughout the Thumb district. Relatives owned site of Bad Axe.

Born in Vermont, he is regarded in the Thumb with the affection felt for a native son.

Obtained all but handful of votes in each Thumb precinct.

Declares showing in Wayne, Arenac and Houghton in primaries was due to organized friends in those districts.

Support of German-Americans was not due to "wet" issue.

He has always been personally "dry."

Declares he had no Detroit saloon support and carried no controlled precincts.

Thinks he received fewer "wet" votes than almost any other gubernatorial candidate.

Refusing to mix governorship and prohibition so as not to confuse a question of humanity with politics.

Democratic triumph in Ohio following Republican governor's Prohibition labors taken by Mr. Sleeper as a vindication of his course.

Plain duty of state government is now to carry out Prohibition.

Not more laws, but more law-enforcement, is needed. a Better reduce the laws by one-half and enforce those that are left.

Believes in budget system, and declares system is provided in constitution, only waiting enforcement.

All prisons should be self-supporting.

Prisons should produce something for the state, something for the prisoner, something for his family.

Reformatories needed for youths between 16 and 21 who commit crimes.

Orphanages needed for parentless children between 8 and 12.

Good roads might be kept up by the state charging the up-keep on the township.

District schools for farmers to study scientific farming needed to increase the productivity of the farms.

PICTURE SHOW WELL ATTENDED

CITIZENS GREATLY ENJOY MOVIES AT BAPTIST CHURCH

Given Under Auspices of Baptist Brotherhood—Boy Scouts Want Xmas Baskets.

The picture show given Tuesday night at the Baptist church under the auspices of the newly organized brotherhood, was a fine entertainment. The kiddies were much in evidence and energetically applauded the pictures, especially the reel featuring Jack and Jim in their always funny tumbling stunts. Good music filled in the intermissions between the pictures, the orchestra consisting of violin, piano and drum excellently handled by Messrs. Will Bellinger and Earl Johnston, with Miss Pearl Booth as accompanist. The auditorium was filled to capacity and many had to stand.

Mr. Vinyard took advantage of a short lull in the program to state that membership in the Brotherhood and in the Women's association was not intended to be limited to members of the Baptist church, but that all who cared to assist in the work among the boys and girls of the community, no matter to what religious organization they belonged, were welcome to join either of these two societies.

He also urged that all present, who felt that they could, have a Christmas basket made up, either of clothes, toys or food, and ready for distribution by the Boy Scouts on December 24th, among the poor and needy families of the town. The Scouts spent half of Thanksgiving day distributing baskets to people who would have had little to eat otherwise, thus carrying out the main Boy Scout principle of doing a good turn to someone at every opportunity. Leave your baskets with Mr. Vinyard not later than December 24th.

Married at Petoskey.

Miss Elsie Newsom, of Hayes township, and Thurlow Weed, of this city, were quietly married by the Rev. Henry Chandler, of the M. E. church of Petoskey, on November 30, Thanksgiving day. The newly weds are well known in this city and have the best wishes of their many friends.

BEAVER ISLAND RIOT CASE CONTINUED

Will Be Re-opened at December Term of Circuit Court.

The preliminary hearing of the Beaver Island riot case was held Monday and Tuesday before Justice Cnoper at the county court house, A. L. Fitch and E. N. Clink appearing for the respondents. Witnesses were examined and the court adjourned Tuesday night.

The case is to be reopened on the 28th of December. Charles and Francis Roddy were put under bond of $500 each to appear at that time, several were released on their own recognizance to appear at the trial and John Green, John C. Callagher and George Risksger were discharged, being absolved by the evidence from any suspicion of complicity in the offense.

L. C. Madison, of East Jordan, was in the city Friday night.

SAID HENRY WOULD FIX UP MATTERS

Detroit Officer Takes Home Man On Charge of Forgery.

An officer from Detroit came to Charlevoix, Tuesday morning and returned that afternoon with one, George Mitchell, of Highland Park, Detroit, who is wanted in that city on the charge of forgery, this sadly misguided gentleman having faked signatures on upwards of 14 or 15 checks, amounting to some $500.

He was captured by the local authorities at Springvale last week and held for the Detroit authorities in the local jail. He claimed to have worked for Henry Ford about a year and three months previous to the commission of his crime and volunteered the information in jail here, that "Henry would fix it up all right when he got back."

Humph, he must think Henry is the whole thing in Michigan. You never can tell though. At the rate the jitney works are expanding he may be yet.

LAUNCH BURNS AT WATER'S EDGE

BACK FIRE OF CARBURETOR CAUSE OF ACCIDENT

Supply of Winter Kindling Proves Quite Expensive to Owner of Launch.

The twenty-two foot gasoline launch owned by Silas Swailes burned to the water's edge Monday afternoon in Pine Lake, about half way between the Belvedere station and the seed house.

Silas had just returned from up the lake with a raft of cedar logs for his winter's supply of kindling and when near the shore the engine stopped dead. Swailes went to start it again and the carburetor back fired, instantly enveloping the craft in flames. He managed to check the blaze with an old blanket which he happened to have in the boat long enough to enable him to unscrew the top of the gasoline tank, thus preventing what might have been a fatal explosion. Somebody turned in an alarm at about 12:45 and the department responded promptly with the chemical engine, wading out in the lake with the hose, but too late to prevent the boat from becoming a total loss. What remained of the hull was not worth rebuilding.

The launch was built only about a year ago and was worth in the neighborhood of a thousand dollars. While there was some insurance, it has not been ascertained as yet what part of the loss is covered. Silas is taking the accident philosophically, like a dead game sport. He certainly has our sympathy.

Two Auction Sales

This issue of the Courier contains two auction sales on the following dates:

Monday, December 11.

George Loomis will hold a sale on the above date at his farm, 1 1-2 miles east and 1-2 mile south of Ironton, commencing at ten o'clock. Read the advertisement on page 2.

William Vortuba, of Traverse City, spent Thanksgiving as the guest of Robert Bridge.

Alvah D. Crimmins, of Mesick, Michigan, was in town last week arranging the details of his accession to the position of cashier of the State bank, to be left vacant by the retirement of W. J. Rachow, which will take effect January 1st.

Word comes to us as we go to press that Charles Hamlin and Pauline Olach, of this city, and Fred Gregory and Ellen Graham, also of Charlevoix, were married in Flint on December 3rd. We don't know whether this was a double wedding or not, our information being rather scanty.

STATE TO TAKE LEADING PART

IN FOURTH ANNUAL NATIONAL CONFERENCE

On Marketing and Farm Credits to Be Held In Chicago, December 4 to 9.

Michigan is to take a leading part in the fourth annual national conference on marketing and farm credits, to be held in Chicago December 4-9, according to the revised program issued. J. N. McBride, farmer and state market director, East Lansing, is state director for the national conference, and has arranged for several of Michigan's marketing experts to go to Chicago to show delegates and experts from every other state how Michigan handles those farm products in which it excells.

At the conference on the marketing of perishable fruit and vegetable products, Tuesday afternoon, December 5, G. E. Prater, sales manager of the Wolverine Co-operative company, Paw Paw, will present a paper on "Selling Michigan Certified Grapes." James N. McBride, state market director, will speak on "State Encouragement of Standardization" at the same conference.

The conference on the marketing of whole milk, in which delegates from all the great whole milk producing sections of the United States will take part in the formation of a national body for the reorganization of their marketing methods, will also attract many Michigan delegates. Some of the dairymen of southwestern Michigan belong to the Milk Producers' association of the Chicago dairy district, which called the conference to better present conditions and eliminate the necessity of the costly milk strikes of the past few months. Many members of the National Grange and the Equity society will also gather for the conference of grain growers.

Delegates expected include: Mrs. Fred Osborn, Ann Arbor; W. C. Wildey, Paw Paw; W. O. Hedrick, Michigan Agricultural college, East Lansing; H. D. Wendt, dairy state food department, Lansing; W. P. Hartman, agricultural and industrial agent, Grand Rapids & Indiana Railway, Grand Rapids; E. J. Kirby, Producers' Exchange, Covert; E. C. Lindeman, co-operative extension work, Michigan Agricultural college, East Lansing.

DEATH TAKES D. W. JACOBS

WAS WELL KNOWN FORMER RESIDENT OF CITY

Had Been In Poor Health for Several Years—Funeral Last Friday.

Daniel W. Jacobs, a former resident of this town, died at his home in Webberville, Michigan, on November 29th last, after an illness of several years duration.

He was born in White Oak, Michigan, January 1, 1847. At the age of 20 he was married at Iosco, Livingston county, to Miss Mary Jane Brotherton of that place. To this union four children were born, of whom two, Wirt Jacobs, of Webberville, and Henry of this city survive him.

He came to Charlevoix with his family about 15 years ago and remained here, making many good friends, until April 1, 1912, when he removed to Webberville.

The funeral was held from his home in Webberville, Friday, December 1st, the Rev. Huffman of the Methodist church in that town, officiating.

A sad feature of the affair was that the family had but a day or two before gathered to pay their last respects to the remains of Mrs. Henry Jacobs and the bereaved husband and his brother were almost immediately summoned to the bedside of their father.

RECORD OF THE PAST

No Stronger Evidence Can Be Had in Charlevoix.

Look well to their record. What they have done many times in years gone by is the best guarantee of future results. Anyone with a bad back; any reader suffering from urinary troubles, from kidney ills, should find comforting words in the following statement.

Mrs. M. Olney, 310 W. Hurlbut St., Charlevoix, says: "I have used Doan's Kidney Pills on different occasions for kidney trouble. I suffered from severe backaches and Doan's Kidney Pills greatly benefited me." (Statement given October 25, 1911.)

USES DOAN'S AGAIN

On October 4, 1916, Mrs. Olney said: "I have never found a kidney medicine that can equal Doan's Kidney Pills. The occasional use of this medicine as a tonic keeps my kidneys in good condition. I will never go back on what I have said before in praise of Doan's Kidney Pills."

The photoplay of the well known serial "Then I'll Come Back to You" will be shown at the Majestic this week. The Courier is now running the story in aerial form each week, and to the readers of Larry Evan'a best book, the dramatization in film will be gladly welcomed. The scenic action is intense as is tbe story. How would you like to be riding on a flat car of a rickety old mountain railroad when in turning a "corner" in the mountains, the car overhangs the precipice at the end of each turn? Well, we admit it is not a very pleasant task, but that is what the member of the Frohman-World Film Corporation had to submit to when they weat bigh up in the Black mountains to take scenes in "Then I'll Come Back to You," in which Alice Brady is featured. It is an excellent film drama with a typical Frohman cast and will be the attraction at the Majestic theatre on Friday, December 8.

"The Light of Happiness."

The Metro Pictures Corporation presents Viola Dana in the role of Tangletop, a role with which she is well acquainted. As Tangletop, the daughter of the village inebriate, she is generally despised by all the townsfolk. There is another girl in the town, Mollie Dean, in love with Van Orden, a blind man, who is heir to a vast fortune. When he regains bis sight, his guardian, who for financial reasons desires his daughter to marry Van Orden, employa the messy looking Tangletop to dispel the dreams which Van Orden has woven around the personality of Mollie. Shortly after this Tangletop's father dies and she is adopted by the new minister of the village. Then there comes the romance of theso two, and the minister gets the usual snubbing by the townsfolk before he lays hold of the chief gossip and forces an apology from him. Through the influence for good exerted over Tangletop by the minister she confesses all about her substitution for Mollie and two love stories end happily.

Lorraince Frost as Mollie, Edward Earle as Van Orden, Robert Walker as the minister and Bert Busby, George Melville, and Mona Kingsley have the roles of principal support to Miss Dana. At the Majestic, Wednesday, December 13.

SCHOOL COMMISSIONER'S NOTES

Pattengill says: "Don't begin work on Tuhal Cain until January is growing old."

A number of our schools have their notes sent in regularly to one or more of the county papers. It's a first chiss plan and the editors appreciate it, too. Keep it up, teachers.

Now is the time to start the exhibit that is to give your school the banner and a substantial prize that will pay all expenses and put your school to the front at the county fair next September. Are you saving yoor daily work?

Word comes from the Gill school that they have a new bell and belfry and are waiting merely for the rope. This is a very small diatrict and means more to them than one side lighting would mean to many of our districts.

The commissioner enjoyed a visit to the county normal class the first of the week.

A visit to the Geim or Springwater school found the boys, for they are mostly all boys, reciting their pieces with zest.

Tbree out of four pupils in the Gill school have been neither absent nor tardy since school started.

PRINCE ALBERT

the national joy smoke

has a flavor as different as it is delightful. You never tasted the like of it! And that isn't strange, either.

Buy Prince Albert everywhere tobacco is sold in toppy red bags, 5c; tidy red tins, 10c; handsome pound and half-pound tin humidors—and—that corking fine pound crystal-glass humidor with sponge-moistener top that keeps the tobacco in such clever trim—always!

Men who think they can't smoke a pipe or roll a cigarette can smoke and will smoke if they use Prince Albert. And smokers who have not yet given P. A. a try-out certainly have a big surprise and a lot of enjoyment coming their way as soon as they invest in a supply. Prince Albert tobacco will tell its own story!

VAN PELT'S TOURING DIARY.

The Baneroft, Worcester, Mass., Tuesday, October 3, 1916.

Another beautiful day for the two boy tourists and our journey together is fast drawing to a close. We left North Adams, Massachusetts, at eight a. m. to cross the mountains on the great National Mohawk trail, and in order to give your readers a far better description than I could possibly give, I am sending the editor of this paper a little booklet, gotten up by the proprietor of the Mansion House, Greenfield, Massachusetts, which will tell you more about it in ten minutes than I could write in ten years.

By the way, I stopped at this hotel over 50 years ago—one night every four weeks for some four or five years, nnd its just the same good old hotel, but much improved in many ways.

Now, to go back to our trip. The day was perfect and the view, as we crawled up the mountain side, was truly grand. We laid over a couple of hours at the Greenfield Mansion House and then drove to Worcester, Massachusetts, passing through Athol, Petersham and Barre. This hotel excels any on the route. There are two places we will never stop again—Troy, New York, and North Adams, Massachusetts. The road over the mountain cost about $316,000 to build and is about 12 miles long. The balance of the way through Shelburn was only fair, but from Greenfield here it was fine. Good night—the two boys are getting tired and are ready to be put to bed.

THE SPIRIT OF ENTERPRISE

It is an interesting problem in business psychology to determine why people will go to one store to trade rather than to another. It is not wholly a matter of personality, of the proprietor and his assistants, nor altogether of the prices or the quality of the goods sold. When a person quits his home town and goes off to trade somewhere else, he does not commonly buy the same article any cheaper. But something in the distant place seems more alluring. Of course the relation of a store to the cost of living is perhaps the biggest factor. Prices come home closer to the modern family than anything else. When a woman reads that a $2.00 shirt waist can be bought for $1.33, nothing in the paper interests her so much. If she gets an idea that a certain place sells cheaper, she will patronize it, and you can't pry her loose from it.

A great many stores win trade by giving an impression that they have enterprise. They spread abroad the idea that they have the spirit of hustle. There is nothing that the American temperament values more than this. If a man can give the idea that he is wide awake, people like to do business with him. They have confidence that he has been alert to get the best values in the market and can afford to sell the same article cheaper.

The American people have little use for inactivity. They care little for the business man who sits down and waits for trade to come to him. They respect and have faith in the man who gets out and hustles for business.

The one way to give this impression of enterprise and hustle is to advertise. Personal solicitation from door to door might accomplish the same result, only it would cost twenty times as much. The newspaper advertisement gives the impression that you are hustling for business, that you are wide awake and keen to pick up the opportunities that are going, at the most favorable terms. The American public like to do business with that type of merchant.

CAMPAIGN CANARD EXPOSED

Near the close of the recent campaign, the department of justice gave out statements calculated to create the impression the Republicans were shipping southern colored voters north and colonizing them. Since election the fact has been made public that within the past year 120,000 negro laborers have removed from the south and that "demand for men in munition plans, in mines, on railroads, and in construction, is largely at the bottom of the migration. Thus the political play loses its force.

DEMOCRATIC ADVANTAGE

Analysis of the vote by which President Wilson has been re-elected discloses some interesting facts. Out of the 531 presidential electors, 126 are elected from the southern states which invariably go Democratic regardless of who the candidates are or what platforms they stand on. There are, therefore, 405 electors from states where there is a real expression upon the issues involved in the campaign. Out of those 405, Mr. Hughes has 255, while Mr. Wilson has only 150. In the states where there was a real political contest President Wilson received only 37 per cent of the electoral vote.

Looking For Them.

Major d'Arlandes, like many another French soldier, was tired of waiting for promotion and opportunities to distinguish himself. He seized an opportunity to enjoy a little excitement and at the same time remind Louis XVI. of his baffled ambitions. He made a balloon ascension, which at that time was thought to be a very risky affair. The king promptly reproved him for his rashness.

"Your majesty will pardon me, I hope," said the officer, "but the fact is the minister of war has made me so many promises in the air that I went up to look for some of them."—London Spectator.

A Mistake Corrected.

"That's a mistake."

"A mistake? I heard it from good authority."

The Girl Will Be Glad of This Gift

Never have fans been so much in evidence as since the dance craze started. Every girl and matron tangoes and, of course, needs a fan after her strenuous exertions. And they are not tiny, useless fans at all. Instead they are large and, properly wielded by a strong masculine arm after the dance, are exceedingly effective.

The girl of the winter should learn, however, how to wield the tiny fan to as great effect as her Spanish sister. What eloquence she reads into the slightest gesture! How her eyes gleam above this tiny instrument d'amour! How it accents every movement in the mazes of the dance! Not for use are these coquettish fans—not for use, at any rate, in the regulation way, as a mode of cooling the atmosphere, but as an aid to a harmless flirtation they are supreme.

The fan illustrated here is of the popular ostrich feather variety. There are various shapes and colors, but one in white or black is most serviceable.

NEW POLICY NEEDED IN GOVERNMENT RAILWAY CONTROL

Helpfulness and Encouragement Urged by Alfred P. Thom.

CREDIT MUST BE IMPROVED

Increase of Transportation Facilities Necessary to Secure Relief From High Cost of Living May Thus Be Provided For by the Railroads.

Washington, Nov. 28.—A new policy of government railroad regulation, based on constructive principles of helpfulness and encouragement instead of upon principles of repression and punishment, was urged by Alfred P. Thom, counsel for the Railway Executives' Advisory Committee, the first witness on behalf of the railroads before the Newlands Joint Committee on Interstate Commerce, which has instituted a general inquiry into the problems of railroad regulation.

"It is proposed by the joint resolution of Congress," said Mr. Thom, "to go into a comprehensive study of the whole subject of transportation, to make a new assessment, after 29 years of experiment, of its history, its present conditions and its future needs. The railroads accept the view that regulation is a permanent and enduring part of government in America and that the first duty of the carriers is to the public. That duty is to afford reasonable facilities on reasonable terms and at reasonable rates, and this must be done before any private interests can be considered."

Certainty, Safety and Sufficiency.

Mr. Thom contended that the real interest of the public is in being assured of certainty, safety and sufficiency of transportation facilities, rather than in rates. The first consideration of the public is to obtain transportation facilities. What the cost is, is in reality a second consideration, he said.

Mr. Thom proposed an increase of transportation facilities as a method of securing relief from the high cost of living. "There have been less than 1,000 miles of new railroad constructed in the United States during the past year," he said, "less than in any year since 1848, except the period of the Civil War, and yet the cost of living is daily advancing owing to a shortage of supplies which might be remedied by securing access to new areas of production.

Credit Must Be Improved.

"This leads to the consideration as to whether railroad credit is as good as the public interest requires. It is impossible for railroads to earn enough to supply the necessary new facilities from current revenue. They must be provided from credit. Investors can not be coerced, but must be attracted."

Among the conditions affecting railroad credit which deter investors he mentioned the following:

"First, Railroad revenues are not controlled by investors, but are fixed and limited by governmental authority and not by one but by several governmental authorities, which do not recognize responsibility for assured results to investors and are uncoordinated.

"Second, Railroads cannot control and the government cannot and does not limit the expense account.

"Third, The present system of regulation is based on a policy of regulation and correction and not on a policy of helpfulness and encouragement.

"Fourth, The outstanding obligations of the railroads have already exceeded the financial rule of safety and involve a disproportionate amount of obligations bearing fixed charges.

"Fifth, The investor must accept a subordinate obligation or security with no assurance of a surplus of earnings to support it.

"Sixth, Other competitive lines of investment present superior attractions.

"Seventh, The railroad business is largely controlled by political instead of business considerations.

Look Forward, Not Back.

"We may debate about what has caused the present conditions," said Mr. Thom, "but we cannot debate about what the people need. The President has taken the view that we must look forward in this matter and 'make a fresh assessment of circumstances' in order to deal helpfully and intelligently with the problem. Abuses are no more prevalent in the railroad business today than in any other business humanely conducted. The great question now is whether the existing system of regulation gives the public reliable assurance of sufficient present and future railroad facilities.

"Those who oppose any change must make their appeal on the ground that the present systems assure the public of the continued adequacy of transportation facilities. If they do not, no argument based on the desirability of the present dual system of regulation will be accepted by public judgment. The question of 'states' rights' is not involved. If the regulation of transportation facilities privately owned should fail government ownership must follow, and then all power of the states over the railroads would disappear.

"Let us debate this question, then, not upon any mere theory or jealousy as to the distribution of governmental power, but upon the large issue of what the public interest requires in respect of the assurance of adequate transportation service."

Customers:

Several days ago we received a letter from an enterprising manufacturer, who was trying to sell us some of his goods. In this letter was a short story regarding an old resident of West Virginia by the name of Silas Jones. This story interested us very much for the reason that it illustrates the question of doubt which so often stands in the way of men seeing things which are facts.

Old Silas had never seen a railroad train. Some friends drove him thirty miles to a railroad station, arriving just in time to see the New York-Chicago limited load and unload its human cargo. Uncle Silas looked the train over, and said, "Fellers, they'll never start hor." Just then the train pulled out and went thundering down the Monongahela valley. Old Silas stood silent, watching the disappearing train. Finally, he turned to his friends and said, "Fellers, they'll never stop hor."

Old Silas represents those people who have made up their minds they can't use IRON DUKE flour. The fact that others do use it, that the mills are every year turning out more and more of it, that the distribution covers more and more territory does not impress them. They can't start.

We know that if they would once start they would find the difficulties they have in mind do not exist, and that they would become permanent users.

Remember that in dealing with us you are dealing with the largest and oldest flour dealers in the county. We probably handle twenty cars of flour to any other dealers one. This gives us the inside track.

Very truly yours,

CHAPTER X.

"Not a Chance in the World."

"Of course you've found Garry?" She hastened to swing the conversation to a less personal quarter. "Is he—will you tell me about it, please?"

One small, gauntleted hand made an almost imperceptible gesture toward the unoccupied space beside her on the fallen tree. But he chose the ground at her feet. And after he had disposed his long length to his liking he answered her hurried question—answered it with an amiably lazy deliberation that promised a sure return to a topic of his own choosing, in his own good time.

"No," he stated, and there was something lugubrious in the baldness of the statement. "He found me. And it was the biggest stroke of luck that he did. I grow more and more lucky this morning. Wouldn't you say so?"

"But you must have an inkling as to the man's identity!" she cried. "Why, you've got to find that out before he does more harm next time. Haven't you a suspicion even?"

One foot swung free. She leaned forward in her eagerness, a slender and entirely boyish figure in diminutive breeches and boots and straight lined coat. And the man laughed aloud up into her flushed face, softly and not quite steadily at her hostile indignation, her intuitive feminine curiosity, and most of all, most unsteadily, at his wonder of her herself.

"Why, yes," he admitted. "Both Joe and I do believe we know who it was, but we aren't sure because we don't understand yet what that man's motive might be. I'd tell you only I don't like to accuse anybody until there is cause for it. But that's what brought me down here this morning—that and because I wanted to tell Miss Burrell that Garry is safe and will continue to be from now on, I hope. Those were two of my reasons for coming at least. I had a more important one than either, but"—

Barbara did not wait for him to tell her what it was. She was staring at him in unfeigned surprise.

"To tell Miriam?" she echoed. "Do you—you can't mean that you knew she cared for Garry?"

"Didn't you?"

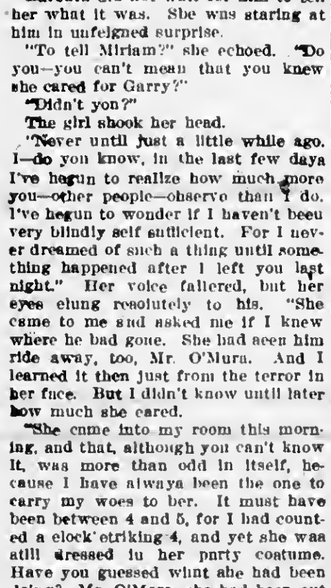
The girl shook her head.

"Never until just a little while ago. I—do you know, in the last few days I've begun to realize how much more you—other people—observe than I do. I've begun to wonder if I haven't been very blindly self sufficient. For I never dreamed of such a thing until something happened after I left you last night." Her voice faltered, but her eyes clung resolutely to his. "She came to me and asked me if I knew where he had gone. She had seen him ride away, too, Mr. O'Mara. And I learned it then just from the terror in her face. But I didn't know until later how much she cared.

"She came into my room this morning, and that, although you can't know it, was more than odd in itself, because I have always been the one to carry my woes to her. It must have been between 4 and 5, for I had counted a clock striking 4, and yet she was still dressed in her party costume. Have you guessed what she had been doing? Mr. O'Mara, she had been out looking for him! She had slipped out and been waiting because she was sure Ragtime would bolt and—and come back home, dragging him by a stirrup! Wasn't that a horrible thing to wait for alone in the dark?"

With a little shudder the girl put her hands over her eyes as if to shut out the picture.

"She wasn't hysterical, either. She was just ice and wringing wet and blue with cold. Cool, proud, intolerant



"Twice I've been bitterly unkind to you."

Miriam Burrell! And I'd never dreamed of her caring for anybody until that minute! I sent her to bed, and I think I hated Garry Devereau for an hour or two. Why, Mr. O'Mara, I'd never believed that a girl could care that much for any man!"

She sat a long time, nursing one slim knee between her palms.

"Mr. O'Mara," she appealed to him at last, "how might one reopen a—a rather difficult subject with—with a suddenly most difficult conversationalist?"

Without turning his head he made answer:

"I think Fat Joe's method is as good as any," he suggested. "Joe says the only way to reopen any argument is to take a running jump and land, all sprawdled out, right in the middle of it. He insists that such procedure leaves no doubt in the mind of any one that the discussion is about to be resumed."

She laughed a little.

"Then shall we consider that I've taken the—the jump and landed?"

Just when she was wishing most that she could see his face he swung around toward her. Again his gravity was a totally gentle thing. It made her remember the self possessed kindliness with which he had met her unreasonable rage the night before.

"Twice I've been bitterly unkind to you," she began, "once a long time ago and—and once last night. And on both occasions you have just tried to tell me, indirectly at least, that you cared, hadn't you?"

"Indirectly?" he murmured. "Was I as obscure as that?" And then whimsically, "Won't you call that explanation enough and let me tell it to you again—so you can't misunderstand?"

"I've asked you to forgive me the first offense," she hurriedly denied his appeal. "And the second, Mr. O'Mara, years ago you told me I didn't think you good enough to—to be my knight. My outburst was only childish temper that day, but did you think last night that I still underrated you?"

Steve finally shook his head when she persisted in waiting for his answer.

"You just have finished now," he warned her, however. "I'm not going to tell you one single bit of what I think of you until it comes my turn!"

She tried to laugh at his stubbornness, but she had trouble with this explanation, which grew more vexingly intricate and involved the further she went.

"Then we'll say you didn't," she continued. "I told you last night, less kindly than I might have, that I was engaged to Mr. Wickersham. And I've just confessed, too, that I didn't know a girl could care for any man as unutterably, as blindly and pridelessly, as Miriam cares for the man Garry is. That is the truth. For quite a long, long time it has been understood that I was to marry Mr. Wickersham. I have always admired him—found him above petty things; but, Mr. O'Mara, I have always been sure for just as long a time that the ability to care for any one the—the way I think you believed last night I might care for you was left out of me. And so it wasn't you who awoke my contempt, even though I did turn it against you. It was I myself. It was I and not you who was not 'good enough,' for even if I am the kind of girl who can't love anybody very much, except perhaps herself, I should at least play fair. Isn't—isn't that so?"

Minute after minute passed, while she sat plaiting the cloth tight stretched over one knee. Lips softly a-quiver, she waited, earnest, eager that he understand from her explanation that which she did not yet understand at all herself. Again she wished that he would turn. She wanted greatly to see whatever there might be behind his heavy silence.

"Isn't it?" she faltered timidly.

And yet when his head did come around she found she couldn't face him.

"Is it my turn now?" he asked.

Her answer was barely audible.

"If—if you have to—have it. But I've told you how useless it is."

"Would you mind looking at me just a minute?" said Steve.

The brown head drooped even lower over the restless fingers. It shook ever so faintly.

"I'd rather not. I'm listening."

His laugh tilted recklessly in sheer joy at her refusal.

"Then I'll have to tell you," he stated, "that I'm smiling in spite of the hopelessness. I'm smiling, even though my throat is aching and my lips pretty dry.

"You've just finished trying to argue my man's case from your woman's point of view, one of the hardest, least satisfactory things that could be attempted, no doubt. And if it were possible I know I'd be loving you right now even more than I did before just because you've been so entirely unsuccessful at it. Maybe I could straighten out a point or two that must have been not quite clear to you; maybe—but I don't want to argue back at you now.

"You say my telling you all I must tell you can't help my case a little bit. All right; we'll let it stand like that for the moment. And you say you are going to marry Mr. Wickersham. All right again, but better prophets than either of us have made mistakes before now! If he hadn't forced on me one condition which I would have liked to be different I'd rather have had to mention no other man at all. This isn't the way I'd have chosen to tell you how much I care. I'd rather have told you a little at a time, but there isn't time for that now. So maybe it'll sound crude to you. I've not rehearsed it with any other woman, you see. And if it does sound that way it won't help me much, either, will it? But you're going to believe what I say!

"You started back a dozen years or so in order to make your explanation clear. I'm starting there myself so I'll be sure you understand. You've been grieving because you hurt me—hurt me twice. Will you stop now if I tell you that I wouldn't exchange those two—shall we call them wounds—for all the kindnesses of all the other women in the world? I did believe that you didn't think me good enough that first time. That was why I was cut deeper than you'll ever know, because I know it was only the truth. I admitted it—remember? I admitted it when I said I was coming back. Well, I'm back now, and I'm still not good enough, and not because I haven't tried to be, either. I'm just not admitting any man alive could be that. But I'm telling you, too, in the same breath that the man who takes you will have to prove he's a whole lot better before I stand aside!"

For the first time since he had begun the girl moved. Her head leaped back. She half lifted one hand in protest, but the very gladness in his face silenced her.

"My turn," he reminded her quizzically. "You've just finished a rather involved bit of reasoning concerning the way other women love, a lot of which I'll have to confess I didn't attend as closely as I should have. Perhaps that's because no man's method of caring has ever interested me a great deal, except my own.

"I loved you when you were a little bit of a girl—because I loved you! And I love you that way now. Your face was the first woman face I ever looked on and—really—saw. And since that first morning it's been with me—been with me a lot of times when I didn't have anything else to look up to. I've been less hungry for thought of you, less thirsty when the road got pretty long at times. I—I worshiped you. Do you hear? Why, I've prayed to you, dumbly, wordlessly, out of black bitterness, when it seemed that any other divinity must be too busy to give any heed to—to the ragged little lad I was. Now, do you think I haven't known what it was long before this to go on when there wasn't any hope?" He waited. Her breath came in a long and quivering gasp. "I—I don't think that I want to—listen any more," she faltered.

His face went white at that, and then he was smiling again.

"I told you I'd have chosen to tell you differently"—the drawling gentleness was unaltered—"but I'll have to finish this way now. There may not be many chances for me to speak, for I've come back to you almost too late. And I don't want to hurt you. Why, I'm going to keep the laughter in your eyes and heart as long as you live, for I thought it would be a woman I'd find when I came back, and I've found you still a girl—all save in those moments when you've seemed half boy to me. And that is strange, too, isn't it—strange that I never knew how much I wanted you to be like that until you taught me the wonder of it yourself? My eyes are stinging. I don't talk quite plainly. My throat is too tight for easy speech, for it's just the old wonder of you after all—just the same—reverence, isn't it? I'll never let you grow up now. You'll have to stay girl—boy—all the rest of your life! I've learned to be fairly sure of myself, but I'm not asking to be sure of you yet. I'd never want to be too sure of you unless all the rest of my whole world had come tumbling down. And then—then I'd need to know always that I could stake my soul on your keeping faith. I'd want to know that I could reach out and find your hand searching for mine in the dark. Your face was the first, girl—it's been the only one. It'll be the last thing I'll see the last moment there is sight in my eyes!"

His slow, infinitely gentle voice stopped. He sat head up before her. Then silently they mounted their horses and rode toward the town.

She rode with wide eyes fastened upon his face; rode with lips parted, all else submerged in that wonder which quickened her breath. Once she leaned toward him as if to speak and then shook her head at the inadequacy of the words. They topped the last rise in the dusty, winding road and raised the river basin and the town itself in that long period of silence. There once more she checked the roan mare.

Quite on a mutual impulse they clasped hands and looked into each other's eyes—quite unnecessarily it may have appeared to the small group on the veranda of the stucco and timber place halfway down the slope between them and town—and there on the crest of the hill, suddenly conscious of those eyes, the girl drew back as swiftly as she had swung toward him.

"What in the world will they think?" she breathed. "I've been gone since daybreak without saying a word that I was going. And it must be noon by now. Come—no, don't hurry! It's too late to hurry now!"

Her chin came up; the line of her lips lost its soft fullness. It was his hot face which made her aware of how surely her imperiously quick orders had stung him. Then she was back, knee to knee, at his side.

"That wasn't fair," she said. "That was most unfair to me. You didn't think, did you, that I"—

His interruption surprised her.

"If I shouldn't inquire," he asked, "will you please tell me and forget I asked the question? May I know when you—you and Mr. Wickersham are to be"—

Barbara's face went slowly crimson, flushed to the nape of her neck.

"It's not a certainty yet, the date," she answered kindly—"just late in the spring, I think."

He nodded. Again she knew how wholly unreadable his eyes could be.

"Late in the spring," he repeated so softly that he might have been talking to himself. "Late in the spring I'll have two time limits run out on me."

Wickersham himself was coming across the lawn to meet them when they drew rein at the head of the driveway. Just as Miriam Burrell, with a studied deliberation that matched that of the tall figure ahead of her, in turn detached herself from the throng and came down the steps Barbara's eyes raised to Steve's. She did not stop to reason it. She couldn't have made it sound reasonable had she tried, but she did not want those two to meet again just then—those two whose boyhood quarrel had centered about herself.

"It's not a certainty yet, the date," she answered kindly.

"Won't you keep Ragtime until you come back to Uncle Cal's tonight?" she asked. "I've kept you loitering for hours and hours on the way. But it will save you a little time."

And this time Steve understood. He nodded in reply.

"Not a chance?" he asked her quietly. "Not a chance?"

She was wheeling the roan.

"Not a chance!" she whispered. "Not a chance in the world! But we—Mr. Elliott promised to show us the works this afternoon," she added in the next breath. "Can you—do you suppose you can come?"

And then as she turned the mare and went skimming up the drive toward the stable she wondered why he laughed.

In his turn Steve set Ragtime's head toward the town in the valley. And therefore he did not see that Archibald Wickersham was left standing alone a moment in the middle of the lawn. But Miriam Burrell saw and understood the black rage that shadowed his face. Long before then she had penetrated to the layer of vanity beneath his air of boredom. More than once she had used that knowledge maliciously to stir him. And she knew how unending could be his hatred for any one who had ever made him appear ridiculous.

CHAPTER XI.

I Never Did Like to Be Beaten.

STEPHEN O'MARA found Hardwick Elliott lunching alone in the East Coast company's main Morrison office, a big unpainted shack that stood half lost in a maze of high piled ties, midway between the sawmills at the river edge and the first snarled network of switches converging on one reddish streak of steel that loomed into the north. He rose and held out a finely tapered hand.

"Now, this is fine!" he exclaimed. "This is really fine, Mr. O'Mara. Rather odd, too—coincidence and that sort of thing, I mean. Because I was just this instant wondering whether I had better send for you or wait until you just happened down river again."

In many ways the president of the East Coast company reminded Steve of Caleb Hunter, even though there could be no two things more in contrast than the latter's calm and comfortable bigness and Elliott's thin and wiry and extremely nervous exterior. It was a similarity due entirely to the innate honesty of both men—such honesty as makes of every attempt at dissimulation an assured nonsuccess. And Miss Sarah had never anticipated her brother's clumsiest finesse with greater ease than did Steve sense that afternoon the weight of worry lighted his employer's first effort at jauntiness. He nodded hopefully, it seemed.

"Something else gone wrong?" Steve asked. "Or are you going to tell me that McLean is still having trouble with that curve of his?"

"No," he replied. "No, we've got that laid, or at least practically so. No, it's not the work itself. You know the first few miles at this end afford pretty plain sailing. We figured on that or we wouldn't stand any chance of finishing the job. And we are quite nicely ahead of our schedule so far. But have you—I was wondering, if you, by any chance, have noticed any signs of discontent in your own squad at Thirty Mile?"

Elliott eased himself back into his chair at the finish of the question. Repugnantly he jerked a thumb in silent invitation toward a plate of sandwiches. It indicated most clearly the state of his appetite—that gesture and Steve could not help but smile a little as he refused.

"No more than the usual disturbances," Steve answered. "I have more or less trouble holding them some of them over the week ends, of course. But then that's always to be expected. They aren't the sort of men that go to make up the general run of construction squads. One of my main reasons for wanting them was the fact that they were rivermen, hardened to swamping and white water work and that kind of thing. In a pinch they're good for twenty-four hours a day over stretches that would take the heart out of most gangs. I don't know of anything that can beat a lumberjack on a squeeze job once you get him to realize that he's up against long odds. It's this ten hour a day thing and too much ready money every pay day; it's a town too deliciously close that makes them a trifle temperamental, Mr. Elliott. Is that what you mean?"

Elliott pondered for a moment.

"That entirely duplicates what McLean said just a day or so ago." On any other lips Elliott's deliberate neatness of phrase might have sounded solemnly funny. "Thoroughly logical, of course thoroughly possible. And yet somehow it does n't fit the case. We've had the usual Monday morning vacancies right along, as you know, but the delinquents always turned up before the 5 o'clock whistle blew or at least reported Tuesday morning. But this is the end of the week, and we're short right this minute very close to thirty men. They aren't coming back, Mr. O'Mara. On the contrary, they continue to dribble away a few every day. And, though they appear to do nothing but talk their time away in the saloons in the lower end of the town, they seem to have just as much money to spend as they did when they were getting their time checks from us."

"What sort of talking?" Steve wanted to know.

"That's just it," Elliott exclaimed. "Their talk leads nowhere. I went down and attempted to find out what their grievance might be, but they close up like clams whenever I come within earshot. They stare at the ceiling, rub their chins and laugh when there's nothing to laugh at. This morning, however, I finally convinced McLean that something was radically wrong. So he took one of them who had just decided to quit and plumed him up against the embankment—but you know McLean and his methods—he shoved his jaw up within an inch of the other's nose and invited him to talk, and—well, he found out enough to make him begin to worry too. Somebody's been talking to them, Mr. O'Mara. Somebody has put the fool notion into their heads that this strip of railroad will mean the end of all lumber operations in this country—the old time river drives, of course. And some of them are beginning to believe, whoever was responsible for that statement."

"You know and I know how absurd it is. We know that this road will mean work for every riverman in this section, as often as he wants to work. But it isn't going to help us any if they can't see it that way. It isn't going to replace the men who quit. I've been deliberating one point. Don't you suppose we might import a regular squad of construction men now, before it's too late?"

"It's too late now," Steve told him, his words none the less final for all that they were absently quiet. "It was too late the day we began operations. And yesterday at this time I wouldn't have given much worry to this particular brand of trouble. They're an odd lot. They're the hardest working, hardest living crowd of big men that ever failed entirely to grow up. But since yesterday—since yesterday—who, did you say, was responsible for that statement, as you call it?"

"I didn't say. And if I—if I had to guess"— The hand passed across his eyes now. "O'Mara, do you know how deeply Mr. Ainsley and myself are involved in this prospect?"

"I don't believe I have ever given it much actual thought," Steve replied. "I never viewed it as any of my affair. But I haven't forgotten the last time we talked the plans over, that you couldn't go into it to lose."

"Of course," Elliott answered quickly. "Of course, of course." He seemed groping for a fresh beginning, then gave up suddenly all attempt at circuity and blurted it out much as though he had lived with the thought too long to endure it longer alone.

"I'm in up to my last dollar," he stated. "And Ainsley why, Ainsley wouldn't have a roof over his head if we failed in our obligations! You must know as well as I do why the banking interests took our paper to those amounts which made it possible for us to drive the first spike."

When he failed to go on Steve understood that the last sentence had been a question.

"Mr. Allison, I suppose." His voice became utterly impersonal. "Without doubt you mean Mr. Allison."

"They would have laughed at us," the older man came back instantly. "And, what is more, they did! They wouldn't touch the proposition until Allison came in with us. And then—but you know what Dexter Allison has done already in this country. I don't know what he started with. I do know that all that Ainsley and I had scraped up between us looked like a shoestring to him.

"We couldn't move until he, of his own accord, expressed his enthusiasm for the plan and asked for a share in the holdings. You know perhaps how he can laugh too. Well, he laughed that way and confessed that we had just beaten him to it. He said it would tap a gold mine this 'strip of steel,' as he called it. He even told us that he'd parallel our road with a competitor, jokingly to be sure, if we hadn't tied up the only available and practicable right of way.

"He came in. He opened up, merely through his own name and all there is behind it, loan possibilities for which we might have struggled uselessly the rest of our lives without his help. Between us Mr. Ainsley and I just managed to hold the balance of stock control and and that's how deep we are in, Mr. O'Mara."

Both men sat and smoked, each avoiding elaborately the other's eyes. After a long pause Elliott cleared his throat laboriously.

"This morning," he continued slowly- "this morning I am in receipt of a communication from Mr. Ainsley himself advising me that another right of way has been applied for for a single track road here in the north. The gossip which chanced to come his way was rather obscure. Little could be learned about the whole affair save that it was being put forward with a view to tapping the ore and timber lands all the way to and beyond the border. But as nearly as he could ascertain the southern terminus of such a road would seem to be about—about at the mouth of that valley southernmost in the Reserve company's timber holdings. Rather a remarkable choice for a railroad terminus, Mr. O'Mara, wouldn't you say so?"

"Do you mean that they've thrown out your earlier application for just such a grant?"

"That would be a rather harshly definite way of putting it," Elliott smiled wryly. "Time is apparently just tabled oh, tabled pending certain immaterial changes in the form! You asked me a moment ago or did I offer to guess? who might be responsible for the report which is costing us our men. I wonder if I need to tell you who controls this new northern route?"

"Maybe you've been telling me," Steve came back coolly. "You have already mentioned"—

"Wickersham!" Hardwick Elliott corrected. "Wickersham—that is, through allied interests which he represents or controls. O'Mara, I doubt if I would even insinuate this to any one else; I have'n't even intimated it to Ainsley as yet. Wickersham is reputed to represent huge moneyed foreign interests. But have you ever stopped to wonder whether he might not represent big local interests as well? I'd like to ask you—what do you think?"

"Yesterday," Steve answered, "yesterday—well, I couldn't guarantee just what I might have thought twenty-four hours back. But doesn't one fact remain unchanged still, no matter what we think? Suppose we admit that some one else does want this stretch of track we're laying. Suppose somebody is figuring on picking it up cheap at a bankruptcy price if we forfeit to the Reserve company. You know yourself that you would never have begun it simply for the profit there will be in moving the Reserve logs and the millions on millions of feet of lumber, both to the east and west, which can't be touched at anything but a prohibitive figure without this road. We were going through to the border too. And if some one else is betting that we don't, if some one else is betting that we can't yank a trainload of logs down to this end of the line before the 1st of May, that doesn't alter our case any, does it? Even though we suspect that some man is playing us to lose, do we have to know exactly who he is?"

Slowly, but very surely, the older man's face began to smooth.

"Once or twice," he stated, "I've thought to anticipate you, perhaps because I have it on you a little, as they say, in the matter of years. I'm not going to attempt it any more, for I thought that this conversation would be at least a surprise to you. You sit there and take it very quietly for a man who has been badly startled."

"Pat Joe has been preaching it for a month." Oddly enough, Stephen O'Mara chose that point at which to laugh softly. "And I, for a month, have been ridiculing him. That's one of Pat Joe's pet diversions, you know. When all other excitement fails Joe invariably falls back upon an imagination too totally vivid to be wasted on technical things. I laughed at him until last night. Do you—but, of course, you know Garry Devereau?" he finished.

"Knew his father," Elliott answered succinctly. "Know him well. Good blood, good brains, big heart! Why?"

And then for the second time that day Steve related the salient points of that episode which had ended with the first gray streaks of returning day. During the recital the expressions which chased across Elliott's face were as varied as they were full of concern.

"Then I wasn't merely hysterical, was I?" he brooded after Steve had finished. "Who—who did you say you thought might be behind the man who would have had your plans had it not been for Mr. Devereau?"

"I didn't say," replied Steve, and for the first time since his entrance there was mirth in the unison of their laughter.

"It all brings us back to the point from which we started," the younger man went on when they were grave again. "It's a plain enough issue so far as we are concerned. We've got to be at the mouth of that lower valley by May. We're going to be! And as I see it, wasting time and energy in—shall we call it sleuthing, Mr. Elliott? —won't help us much. We thought that lack of time and the general nature of this country were going to be handicap enough. But now your money is in and I—I never did like to be beaten. Can't we let it stand like that, at least until some one else makes a plainer move? We know the cards we hold. If others care to sit in perhaps we'll all come to a showdown next spring at Thirty Mile. It'll be easy enough to explain just how we did it. Alibis based on veiled opposition would not interest the Reserve people much if we left their timber there to rot. • • • And I'm trying not to overlook any bets, Mr. Elliott."

Hastily the iron gray man thrust his hat back from his forehead. He came to his feet and, crossed and clapped one hand upon Steve's shoulder.

"Next May," he barked. "O'Mara, I'm glad you came down this morning. I've been carrying a lot of those ideas around in my head until they had become nightmarish. But I'm through now. You won't hear me croak again. I staked what I had on you months ago. I'd do it again this minute. What's the odds, after all, who it is that's playing us to lose? It's only the fact that somebody may be fighting us that needs to occupy our attention. I'm done worrying. Do you hear? But what about those men who are quitting us? You are sure it would be unwise to import labor? It's cheaper, you know."

Steve, too, had risen.

"We'd have the prettiest kind of a scrap on our hands the first day we tried to use them," he explained. "It would be dead enough before we got through. I guess I'd better run right out and have a talk with McLean. He knows these men even better than I do, and I'm almost one of them, you know. And I'll get a line on some of these delinquents who are crying calamity for the countryside. I'd better, because we'll need them. They simply haven't become thoroughly interested yet, that's all. It will take something to jolt them, something to set them on fire. And then then just watch my plaid shirted boys go! They'll eat up your sledge swingers!"

Something of that promised fire was reflected now in Hardwick Elliott's eyes.

"By Gad," he exclaimed; "by Gad, if it wasn't for Ainsley, I'd say the thing was worth it, win or lose, just for the game itself! You go ahead and see McLean. I'll be out there later myself. I promised Allison that I'd show the works to some of the young folks up there on the hill. His daughter—but I keep forgetting that you've known her longer than I have. There's quite a party of them. She announced her engagement to Mr. Wickersham last night, I believe. Heard that this morning. Was too busy to go up last night myself. Maybe you'll find time to help me play the host."

Steve turned toward the door. "So I heard," he replied, without facing around. "I'll try to be on hand."

Daily Christmas Hint

Baskets Are Always Acceptable Gifts

Only the busy housewife knows the necessity of many baskets. For the socks and stockings which must be darned, for the unfinished piece of embroidery, for the mending that must be done—all these things require the special basket. Illustrated here is a nest of baskets which can be used for all the things mentioned, while in the topmost basket can be kept all of baby's toilet articles. The convenient point about these baskets is that they can swing one underneath the other, thus taking up very little room.

Purifies Poultry Water.

Do not be afraid to use permanganate of potash in the drinking water for poultry whenever there is any sign of colds or any bowel disease. It will not injure the tiniest chick when used in the usual strength, which gives the water a light wine color, and its use may prevent infection by destroying any germs that may find their way into the water vessels.

The Starving Children's Fund.

Doubtless many readers of the Courier have been touched as they have read in different periodicals of conditions existing in Europe among women and children, the sick and nged. Perhaps there are those who would like to express their feelings in some tangible way, but do not know what they can do.

The Christmas Work Magazine, No. 70 Fifth avenue, New York city, has undertaken to raise half a million dollars at once to save the children of Armenia, Belgium, Poland and the Balkans.

The Christmas ship was provisioned largely from the fund but it will be necessary for the people of this country to give again and again to the relief of these suffering people who through no fault of their own, are homeless, cold and hungry. The nations at war have trampled their lands underfoot and left them desolate.

Everyone can do something to help and especially at the Christmas time when most of us open our purses if at no other time of the year for the relief of the poor and needy. Christ said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, My brethren, ye have done it unto Me."

MARINE NEWS

Frank Carlson left Monday noon with his gasoline boat for Manistee. He towed another boat behind with a load of potatoes and apples and his nets. He expects to put in the winter there fishing.

The Sumac left Charlevoix, Monday, for Manitou Island to get the lightship stationed there and tow her to Sturgeon Bay for the winter. The lightship at the straits and the one at White Shoal leave their positions next Sunday, the 10th, and proceed under their own steam to Charlevoix harbor, where they will lay up for the winter. This is the first time that we have had the lightships lay up here. December 10th will practically see the end of navigation on the lakes. Most of the buoys are now in storage for the winter and none but shore lights are now left.

The tug, Two Sisters, left Sunday for the Manitou to gather whitefish spawn.

The barge Venezaela, bound from Escanaba to East Jordan with a load of ore, came into this port just ahead of the squall Tuesday morning. The Charles Horn, of Manistee, followed her through the channel close behind. The Horn will load amber at East Jordan for Chicago. Both boats got in just in time. Had they been an hour later it is probable they could not have made the mouth of the channel.

The barge Snowden, from Beaver Island, came in Monday night with a load of hemlock lumber for the Charlevoix Lumber company.

The barge Arizona, of Buffalo, came in to this port Tuesday noon, from East Jordan, on her way to points down the lake with a load of lumber, but was forced to tie up at the Lumber company's dock on account of the high seas and stiff blow.

More Heat—Less Fuel

With the "Underfeed" method the smoke, gas and soot are consumed

If you want to get away from the disagreeable feature of the smoke rushing out into your face every time you put soft coal on the fire, try the

"Renown" Underfeed Heater

The coal is fed under the fire and the smoke and gas are forced up through the red hot coals, where they are mixed with highly heated air and consumed. Don't smother your fire by putting soft coal on top of it.

You will positively save 25% or more on your fuel bill and get more heat

We will guarantee that this stove will not puff or explode, if operated according to our instructions.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN HAPPENINGS

Events of Interest to Courier Readers

Death Shatters Romance.

Unexpected death gave a cruel twist to the lives of Jay Chamberlain, commissioner of schools of Cheboygan county, and Miss Pearle Kilpatrick, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Kilpatrick, also of Cheboygan.

These two well liked people were to have been married Christmas day and had their plans completed for the wedding ceremony, their honeymoon trip and their residence in Cheboygan upon their return.

Then came the sudden illness of Mr. Chamberlain, who suffering a stroke of paralysis while giving a lecture before the Indian River high school, death following a short while later.

Miss Kilpatrick is a former Emmet county girl and her many friends there and in Cheboygan sympathize with her in her sorrow.

Braced Wrong Man.

Several local retail stores, of Boyne City, extended credit to a man representing himself as a brother of Thomas and William Bigelow, of that city, recently. Other individuals were "braced" for assistance under the hard luck plea.

The recipient of the goods obtained under false pretense, spoiled his own game, however. One day he approached William Bigelow, working at the tannery, and asked for aid giving the old story of being a Bigelow brother. When asked the name of his brother he gave that Thomas Bigelow, employed on the railroad. Upon being informed that Thomas was also a brother of the man he was talking to he beat a hasty retreat and give up his game.

Carnegie Library Assured.

The mills of the Gods grind slowly, but East Jordan has been slower yet in reaching a decision on the public library proposition. Without question a majority of our citizen tax payers were in favor of a library but for years we had a small percentage who were opposed to the proposition and it has taken years to have these people see things in their proper light. For the past six or eight years W. P. Porter, of the East Jordan Lumber company, has generously offered to donate a fine building lot on the corner of Main and Williams street as a site for a library building. In addition to this, A. H. Frost, of the East Jordan Lumber company, has recently came forward with an offer to donate $500 per year for a period of five years for the maintenance of such an institution.

The Carnegie corporation make us a liberal proposition and easy to meet. The will furnish the city of East Jordan $12,000 to erect a free public library providing the city will pledge ten per cent of this amount per year for maintennance. With a building donated, a site donated and $500 per year for five years donated for maintenance, East Jordan could not afford to pass the opportunity by. A petition to our city commission asking them to accept the offer, was presented that body, signed by practically all of our tax payers. The matter was taken up and passed. East Jordan will undoubtedly have its long-needed public library within a year.—Charlevoix County Herald.

First Auto Hearse In County.

S. B. Stackus, of Boyne City, who has been an undertaker in this city for about 20 years, has added the latest improved motor hearse to his already well equipped plant.

In this Mr. Stackus takes the lead in this section. The vehicle is mounted on the regular Ford chassis and has a specially constructed body which makes it available for either hearse or ambulance duty.

Presented Purse of Gold.

At the banquet of the dry leaders and workers at Boyne City last week Friday night the manager of the late campaign in Charlevoix county, Rev. Quinton Walker, of Charlevoix, was presented a purse of $100 in gold for his efficient services. After the banquet proper, those present went into the matter of new legislation and law enforcement, and the proposition was favored to organize the county voters so as to elect men to office who would be favorable to the cause. It was also proposed to begin a campaign to enforce the law against slot machines and games of chance.

Killed By Fast Train.

On Saturday afternoon, November 25, as Judge T. C. Woodin was walking on the railroad track in front of his home in the south part of the village of Vanderbilt, he was struck and instantly killed by the northbound Cannon Ball. His wife witnessed the accident and ran to the scene to see who the unfortunate man was that was knocked down, and was horrified to find that it was her own husband. The old gentleman had been up town on an errand and was returning home at the time. The engineer saw him on the track and whistled to warn him. The judge heard the warning and stepped off but did not get far enough from the track and was hit by the pilot his skull being crushed.

The deceased was a veteran of the civil war and had been a resident of Otsego county for upwards of 40 years. In the early history of Otsego county he was judge of probate for two terms and for more than 25 years had been a justice of the peace in his township. He was a charter member of Cyrene lodge, F. & A. M., which was instituted at Berryville some 43 years ago, and when the town dwindled out was removed to Vanderbilt. The judge was about 76 years of age, and is survived by his wife and two daughters.

Wife Deserter Arrested.

Last Sunday, Officer McNally, of Boyne City, was requested by phone to place on, Ed. VanSickle, under arrest and hold him for the sheriff of Eaton county. Securing a description of the man from parties boarding at the same house with him, McNally started out for his man and located him Sunday afternoon. He was placed in the local bastile, in the city hall building, until Deputy Sebring, of Eaton county, came for him.

VanSickle is said to be a slippery individual and Deputy Sebring took no chances with him, placing him in irons before removing him from the jail.

The prisoner has a wife and large family of small children. The wife is ill with no means of support.

Goes to Eastern War Front.

Dr. W. H. Marshall, eminent physician and surgeon formerly of Boyne City where he was known in all circles, left New York on Saturday of last week for London. He recently completed a four months post graduate course in Chicago and has received an appointment in a military hospital for the English forces.

The European war has opened the doors of wonderful opportunity for the medical profession, revolutionizing as no other agency could have done. A brilliant man with remarkable retentive powers Dr. Marshall will return from his experiences in Europe with a knowledge permitting him a high position in his profession in this country.

He has a great many close friends and many more admirers, in this city who will send their best wishes with him across the ocean.

BETTY'S LIFE SAVED BY USE OF RED CROSS SEALS

She Was Taught How to Care For Herself After Her Mother Had Died.

"She was real pretty, and so full of fun that the dimples were always showing in her round, red cheeks." The visiting nurse of the Anti-Tuberculosis Society was talking. "Her eyes were big and brown and nut-colored hair curled naturally in little ringlets over her forehead and ears. She was just eighteen when we first met her and so neat and attractive that one would think she belonged to the well-to-do class of working people, but when we followed her to her home one day we confronted startling facts.

"The red in her cheeks was the flush of unnatural inward fever, the high spirits were a pitiful antidote to pitiless conditions, and the big brown eyes saw only squalor when they were not fixed upon a typewriting machine or closed persistently to any view but an imaginary bright one.

"The room we entered was a general living space, used also as an eating, cooking and sleeping apartment. There was but one bed, and Betty had to sleep in it with her mother, who was too weak to sit up. An open cuspidor sat where it would be conveniently near the bed, which placed it by the stove, where their food was cooked. The mother, who was suffering in an advanced stage of tuberculosis, did not like cold air, and her querulous demands caused Betty to keep the door and windows closed.

"'Well,' said cheerful Betty, with a laugh, 'that isn't so bad as not having any windows or doors to close, is it? Things might be worse.'

"'Infinitely worse,' said I. 'You might even take a notion to stuff the windows and doors with rags to cut out what oxygen comes in through the cracks.'

"Red Cross Christmas Seals, with their cheery message of hope, gave Betty a chance to get well after her mother died. Is it worth while to save the Bettys? Buy your share today."

HOW RED CROSS SEAL IDEA CAME INTO BEING

Originating in Norway, Method Was Taken Up Here Nine Years Ago.

Over $3,250,000 has been raised by Red Cross Christmas Seals in the last eight years, and yet many people who will buy these holiday stickers at this ninth annual sale do not know how this idea originated.

While Red Cross Seals really date back to the Civil War when "Charity Stamps" were first used, the first campaign to sell holiday stickers for the tuberculosis fight was only nine years ago in Delaware. Miss Emily P. Bissell of Wilmington read an article by Jacob Riis describing stamps used for tuberculosis work in Norway, and she conceived the idea of a similar plan here. Single handed, she launched a sale which resulted in $3,000 clear money. When Miss Bissell tried to convince the American Red Cross that this idea should be made national as a peace activity of that society, she met with opposition, but finally persuaded the authorities, with the result that on an investment of a few hundred dollars $135,000 worth of Seals was sold in 1908 and the great national campaign was launched. Since then the sale has gone forward by leaps and bounds, until now the Red Cross Seal is an institution in the United States, and offers to every one a chance to help in the people's fight against the people's disease. Last year over 70,000,000 Seals were sold, and this year the American Red Cross and The National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, who conduct the sale, are out for a 100,000,000 sale or $1,000,000 for the Tuberculosis War.

The policy on which the sale is conducted is that the money, except for the deduction of legitimate expenses, shall remain in the community where the Seals are sold.

Prisoners of Verdun.

During the Napoleonic wars of more than a century ago Verdun was the principal camp for Britons taken prisoner by the French. The confinement of these prisoners was not strict, and they had much leisure, it is said, for gambling, dueling and even for love-making among the damsels of the province. Verdun was even envied for getting the "keep" of these prisoners, and the mayor of Metz petitioned the French government for a share of them. Among these desirable Britons was Lord Yarmouth, said by some to be the original of the Marquis of Steyne in Thackeray's "Vanity Fair" and of Lord Monmouth in one of Disraeli's novels.

Between Them.

"Yes," said Mrs. Catchem, "those are my daughters over there on the sofa. They have half a million between them."

It was not until they were married to those daughters that the young men who overheard the remark found out that Mrs Catchem referred to the rich old gentleman who sat on the sofa between the girls. Mrs. Catchem could not tell a lie, but she knew how to speak the truth to the best advantage.—Exchange.

The things which Rebecca thinks of to do are enough to astonish less conservative people than Miss Mirandy, but, also, it would take a heart even harder than hers to steel itself against Rebecca's charm.—Prentice and Power.

GRATEFUL PATIENT BUYS RED CROSS SEALS

Tells Why He Supports Great National Red Cross Christmas Movement.

"Personal experience means much in one's attitude toward the Seals. Will you let me tell why both gratitude for the saving of my life and a desire to help exterminate tuberculosis makes me buy and use Red Cross Christmas Seals?" This is a request in a letter from a cured patient in one of Wisconsin's County Hospitals for Tuberculosis, who says:

"I was shocked to learn in 1910 that I had consumption. I thought that was the end of me. Fortunately for me the National Tuberculosis Association and the American Red Cross had taken up the task of informing the nation that a pulmonary tuberculosis can be arrested and perhaps cured by a combination of fresh air, good food, perfect rest, and freedom from care. In course of time this good news had reached Wisconsin and the Wisconsin Anti-Tuberculosis Association was organized to carry the message into every corner of the state. Through this propaganda sanatoria were established in various parts of the state. So when the disease became a very personal matter to me, there was an institution near at home to teach me how to breathe, eat, rest, and think, so as to live with tuberculosis, and at a price within reach of my moderate purse. This was all the result of the philanthropic propaganda of these national organizations and the Wisconsin Anti-Tuberculosis Association, to whom I must always be grateful for my present health and strength."

What Red Cross Seals have done in Wisconsin they have done and are doing in every other state in the Union. All but ten per cent of the proceeds, which is used for expenses, remains in the state where the Seals are sold to be used for tuberculosis work.

RED CROSS SEAL FIGURES.

325,000,000 Holiday Stickers Already Distributed In United States.

Few people have any conception of the magnitude of the Red Cross Christmas Seal Campaign. Here are a few figures that will show what a gigantic movement this is. Already 325,000,000 Seals have been printed and practically that entire number distributed to agents in every state and territory of the Union from Alaska to the Canal Zone, from Porto Rico to Hawaii, and even in the far-off Philippines. Advertising circulars, posters, cards, etc., to the number of several millions, have also been distributed. Not less than 1,000,000 personal letters asking people to buy Seals have been sent out. It is estimated that the army of workers, nearly all of whom are volunteers, engaged in selling the Seals numbers well over 500,000. The advertising and publicity devoted to the campaign amounts to several hundred thousand dollars. Every effort is being put forth to sell 100,000,000 Seals, or only one for every man, woman and child in the United States. This will mean $1,000,000 for the anti-tuberculosis campaign in the United States. Over 1,500 anti-tuberculosis associations of the country derive their support from Red Cross Seals.

JERRY WANTS A LUNG.

Purchase of Red Cross Seals Will Help to Supply Need.

WANTED: A good lung. This was the theme of a letter in rhyme received the other day by the St. Louis Society for the Relief and Prevention of Tuberculosis from ten-year-old Jerry O'Connor, a pupil at the open air school formerly conducted by that society. His poem, inspired by the Red Cross Christmas Seal Sale, follows:

"Now, if there's a present goin' round.
There's just one thing for me,
Ask Santee for one new lung,
A right one—mine's T. B.

"T. B. is what skinny folks has,
It kills us poor, weak boys.
So, in your prayers remember me,
I wish you a thousan' joys.

"A Merry Christmas to you all,
A song I've often sung—
But don't forget dis skinny kid,
And pay for his new lung."

There are thousands of Jerrys all over the United States who want "new lungs" and a chance to save their old ones. The sale of Red Cross Seals helps to provide open air school, sanatorium, and home care for such boys as Jerry.

SECRETARY BAKER LIKES RED CROSS SEAL IDEA

Wants His Children to Become Partners In Anti-Tuberculosis Fight.

Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War, is an enthusiast in the use of Red Cross Christmas Seals. A year ago, when he was still Mayor of Cleveland, he wrote to the Anti-Tuberculosis League of that city as follows:

"I enclose my check for $1.75 for this year's Seals and also my order for Seals for 1916. No other one thing means so much to life, health and happiness of the people of Cleveland as the fight against tuberculosis. The League is offering a great privilege to the people of Cleveland in giving them this opportunity to join their forces in a great cause.

"Please send twenty-five Seals to each of my children. Address them Betty, Jack and Peggy Baker, respectively, at my house, 1851 Crawford Road. I want them each to put seals on each of their Christmas presents so that they will learn that they, too, are partners in the community burden and share the community opportunity."

Have you bought your Red Cross Seals and shouldered thereby your share of the community burden and opportunity?

FIRST LOSS OF LIFE IN 33RD

SOO PRIVATE SHOT BY FRENZIED NEGRO

Northern Michigan No Comparison In Regard to High Cost of Living—Suffer From Cold.

(BY HAROLD W. USHER)

El Paso, Texas, Dec. 4.—Things are practically the same in camp. Saturday, November 25th, was reserved as field day by the Michigan brigade and all kinds of field sports and horse and mule races were held. The Thirty-third Regiment proved winner in all the races snd carried off the honors. We also won a foot ball game with the Thirty-first—score 28 to 6. Last Sunday, our team won over the Eighth Ohio infantry, 13 to 3.

The work of the Thirty-third is becoming more interesting every day. Regimental problems are worked out by the different companies. Next Friday, December 8th, a divisional parade and review before the leading generals in the district is to be held. It is said that it will take this review six hours to pass the generals. We hope our movement home will closely follow this event.

General Francisco Villa is now attacking Chihuahua city, about 150 miles north of here. The battles so far have been fierce, but the bandits have been held off.

The first death in the Thirty-third Regiment occurred Thanksgiving night, when John A. Curry, a member of Company M, was shot and killed by a negro named Isaac Coffee, on Alemenda street. Curry had been in this part of the town during the afternoon and evening and had been joking with the negro. During this time, Coffee, who is a dope fiend, became enraged at Curry, while the latter believed the colored man had taken what he had said to him as a joke. No one paid any attention to his threat that he was going to get a gun. He went away and shortly returned to the Lone Star saloon, where Curry and some others were talking together. On the way over, he had threatened four or five people with a gun, but no one took him seriously. He started an altercation with Curry and finally leveled his weapon, a double barreled shot gun, and emptied both barrels into his groin at a distance of about ten feet. A member of the motorcycle company who heard the shots came up just in time to see Curry fall and taking the gun away from the crazed negro broke it over the latter's head and held him until the arrival of the patrol. Curry was taken to the Fort Bliss hospital, where he died Friday morning at 7:10 o'clock. His body was shipped to his home in the Soo, the departure being honored with due military ceremony.

Our Thanksgiving dinner was some dinner. Oyster soup and crackers, roast turkey and dressing with turkey gravy, cranberry sauce, green peas, mashed potatoes and bread and butter, chocolate cake, plum pudding, pumpkin pie, oranges, grapes, bananas and candy. The people in northern Michigan complain of the high cost of living, but they ought to be sent to Texas awhile. Short wood, such as we get from the saw mill at home for practically nothing, is $11.00 a cord here. Beans cost Uncle Sam $11.74 and eggs 45c a dozen. You see, we eat up several dollars worth a week.

Today (Sunday) Lieutenant Cummings, Sergeants Griffin and Patterson indulged in a hunting trip instead of going to church. They returned in the evening, looking very wary and carrying something in a sack. While we make no insinuations, the fact that there were feathers on Griffin's coat and they cooked their spoil after dark, we fear that either the neighboring farmers or the local game warden had better look out.

Michigan may be cold and in the north, but it has nothing on these Texas nights. It snowed last week and the tops of the Franklin mountains are covered with snow. It certainly looked good to us Michigan boys. We feel the cold more here, though, due to the thinness of the atmosphere, especially, when you have but two blankets between you and the frost.

I would also like to pass a remark about the new issue of government underwear, which was guaranteed not to scratch, chafe, or suddenly unravel. This guarantee was taken in good faith by the boys at first. Later, we were much in doubt. An hour or so after donning these new regimentals, we were subject to a strange feeling up and down our spinal columna. Remembering the good quality of the underwear, we began to look about for some other cause of the disturbance. As we could find no horned toads, or other crawling insects, reptiles, etc., we are beginning to have our doubts on this non-scratch proposition.

According to a report made by the chaplain of the Thirty-third, our regiment has been sending out twice as much mail to Michigan as we have been receiving. This shows somewhat of neglect on the part of the folks at home.

Guess we are coming home mighty soon, as all the troops staying here have winter quarters and we have not. Also we have that review, which always comes before a movement. We finish our drill program laid out for us Thursday.

TABLES RICHARDI CONTRACT FOR TWO WEEKS

Council Has Lengthy Session Monday Night—Buy Snow Plow.

The council, at its meeting Monday night, passed all necessary resolutions looking to the issuance of the bonds and the advertising for bids on the south side sewer.

The new lighting contract with the successors of Henry Richardi was laid on the table for a couple of weeks.

The council also voted to buy a new snow plow.

Though nothing was said about the fish hatchery proposition in this session, and though possibly mention of it does not properly belong in this place, it might be interesting to note that the bill providing for the new hatchery at Charlevoix has passed the house of representatives and has now gone to the senate for their action.

Home of Mrs. Margaret Stewart Scene of Merry Gathering.

Last Thursday, December 7, being Mrs. Margaret Stewart's birthday, half a dozen of her lady friends thinking to make the day a pleasant mile stone in the pathways of life for her, planned a potluck dinner in her honor.

Another half dozen ladies, imbued with the same idea, but knowing nothing of the first party, also decided to have a potluck dinner in Mrs. Stewart's honor.

The result of these various projects was a double surprise and a combination of good things to eat, that gave no suggestion of hard times or the "high cost of living."

The table was prettily decorated with carnations and in front of the hostess was placed a birthday cake decorated with smilax and garnished with candles.

While doing justice to the delicious dinner provided, the two surprise parties with their hostess spent the time in merry jest and laughter. The afternoon passed quickly and about five o'clock the guests departed, wishing Mrs. Stewart many more as pleasant birthday anniversaries.

DIED SUDDENLY WHILE AT PLAY

Little Daughter of Owen Gillespie Expires Sunday Evening.

Josephine, the little daughter of Owen Gillespie, who lives on South Bridge street, died very suddenly Sunday night from causes unknown. Her elder sister was playing the organ and the child, who is only two and a half years old, was dancing about the room keeping time with the music, when she suddenly dropped to the floor and lay inert. Medical assistance was summoned but the child had evidently died immediately, supposedly from strangulation. The blow is a terrible one to the bereaved parents and no less so as the mother of the child is herself critically ill, and there are a number of small children in the family.

The body of the little girl was to have been taken to Beaver Island Monday morning for burial, but the steamer was forced to put back on account of the snow flurries and the trip was delayed until Tuesday morning.

This is the annual meeting when reports will be given by the secretary and treasurer and officers elected for the ensuing year.

FELL AND BROKE HIS RIGHT LEG

Little Donald Bennett Slips On Dining Room Floor.

Donald Bennett, the 11 year old son of H. S. Bennett, of West Antrim street, slipped on the floor of the dining room at his home last Saturday evening and broke his right leg just below the knee. The boy was a victim of infantile paralysis in his infancy, which left this leg weak, making it necessary, since then, for him to wear a brace continually, and his parents had been to a good deal of expense to effect a cure. The weakened condition of the leg caused it to break more easily than if it had been sound.

He had just come in from out of doors and it is thought that snow, adhering to his shoes, caused him to slip. The fracture was promptly set and is doing as well as can be expected. We fancy, however, that this will be a rather tedious Christmas for the young man.

Resigns as Supervisor.

Jacob E. Chew, for a number of years supervisor from South Arm township and chairman of the county board during the last year, has resigned as supervisor and Charles P. Murphy has been named to serve in his place. Mr. Chew will take the oath of office as representative from the Charlevoix district the first of the year.

24-Page Christmas Number

Notwithstanding the fact that newspaper print has advanced from $46.00 to $130.00 per ton, and that a majority of Michigan newspapers have advanced their subscription price from 25 to 50 cents per year, the Courier presents to you a 24 page Christmas number, full of advertising and well selected reading matter. This number is but a repetition of a custom we started several years ago—that of giving our readers just prior to the holidays—a big Christmas number.

The Courier management also wishes to acknowledge at this time its thanks to the merchants whose advertising appears in this issue, especially to those who are weekly advertisers, for the liberal support they have given us. The success of every newspaper depends entirely upon the support given them by the local advertisers, and we feel in presenting this number that we have the backing and good will of the entire community.

During the past year the growth of the Courier has been greater than during any previous year under the present management. Our circulation and number of advertisers have increased over 30 per cent. The Courier contains never less than 10 pages each week, and many weeks it runs to 12 and 16 pages. Every page is printed in this office and filled with local or county news, which makes it a valuable advertising medium.

Again we thank you for your patronage and good will extended us during the past year. Our appreciation will be returned in an effort to give you a bigger and better newspaper. We sincerely wish you a Merry Christmas and a Most Prosperous and Happy New Year.

SHUT OUT OF CHRISTMAS JOYS

NO SANTA CLAUS FOR THESE UNFORTUNATE TOTS

Investigation Reveals Pitiful Condition of Family of Ten at Our Very Doors.

An almost unbelievable story of suffering and poverty has come to the attention of the Courier this week—unbelievable, we say, because this is a community noted for its benefactions and charities, both private and public as well as for its apparent absence of pauperism and actual want.

The case was first brought to light when the county truant officer followed up the report that the eldest of the family of eight children, a girl of 15, was working in the fields with her father, who had come here from Chicago last spring with his family, lured by, what he claims he understood, were promises of steady work in the sugar beet fields the year around, and which promises failed miserably of fulfilment. The man, who is a Bohemian, and speaks but little English, when threatened with arrest for keeping his daughter out of school, pleud that he could not afford to buy her books nor clothes, and that if they put him in jail someone must support his family.

Recent investigation has disclosed the fact that no more pitiful case of squalid poverty has ever been known in this vicinity. The father and the mother who speaks no English at all, and their little brood of eight children, of whom the oldest is 15 years and the others ranging from nine years to four weeks, live in a rickety little shack in the Adams' Lake district and have literally nothing to wear, but little to eat and nothing to hope for this happy Christmas season, when so many of us are thinking fondly of our own little curly-heads and their winsome delight in Santa and the wonderful Christmas stocking and our minds travel back over the centuries to that first glad Christmas day when God in His fathomless love for His people sent them his only Son, the first and best Christmas gift of all, to succor the weak and the suffering, the faint and weary of the earth.

Think of it, you mothers, you who delight in displaying the dainty things of spotless lace and linen you have planned for your own much beloved little toddler, or the delicate little pink and white wonder which perhaps has but recently come to be your sacred and awful trust out of the very gates of heaven. Think well, if the care of this little soul, born only four short weeks ago into a life of poverty and want in a strange land, pinched with the cold and starving for the more decencies of life, be not also a part of your stewardship.

No soft linen nor fine laces for this poor little tiny mite—only a single, threadbare cotton slip to shield it from the merciless cold of these bleak months. When this flimsy bit of cloth is washed, the mother says—for she is still a mother like yourselves, and would do the best she can for her baby, she must wrap the child in a ragged quilt and lay it on the bed until the garment is dry. And imagine having to care for this little helpless thing and do a man's work about the house at the same time, even to pulling at one end of a cross-cut saw with the child in her arms, as this poor woman was seen to do one day this week.

The strangest thing about the whole matter is that this family lives in the midst of a Christian community, and yet for weeks, knowing in a vague way of the destitute condition they were in, not one soul has entered the house to offer help or investigate the conditions, and this comes to us on the testimony of a near neighbor. Truly may the enemies of Christ point to the terrible inconsistencies and blindness of his professed followers when such things may exist unheeded in a land so richly blessed by his mercies.

An attempt is now being made to bring some slight relief to these poor unfortunates, and last Wednesday a group of whole-souled women gathered at the Baptist church to sew on garments for the little waifs who need them so badly. Another session will be held Friday afternoon and evening at the same place, and you, dear reader, are requested to be present and do what

DEDICATION OBSERVED WITH FITTING CEREMONIES

Supt. Holliday of East Jordan Delivers Address of Occasion—Day of Great Rejoicing.

"Ilsyes, December the 7th—We're putting Hopyard on the map, while our neighbors take a nap." This was the yell which the pupils yelled in the presence of fathers and mothers and visitors from three neighboring districts, when their school house stood a second inspection and was found to meet all the health requirements laid down by W. L. Coffey, of Lansing, in his visit to the district last spring.

This school has four 4x8 windows at the left of the pupils, one side lighting in ideal arrangement, approved shades in wall tinting, warm cloak rooms, narrow hallway, single adjustable seats—everything that is required of course and then the recommended as well. Just a simple little country school from without, but within you will find a workshop fully and carefully equipped to produce the efficiency required by the age and reflecting the spirit of the parents and school board to do and to dare.

The teacher, Earnest Peaslee, had invited the county normal class to be the guests of the district on this occasion and they favored all with one of their school songs. Boys and girls recited, sang and yelled with energy and vim. Superintendent Holliday, of East Jordan, delivered the address of the occasion and took the opportunity to point out rural ideals for years to come, charging the district not to stop here, but to progress and to continue to progress.

This is the third standard school built by Mr. Peaslee in the past year, and he may well be proud of his record. The school board, Messrs. O'Brien, Howe and Srigley were represented on the program by Mr. Srigley, who stated that the district would express its thanks and joy by serving ice cream and cake to everybody present. Thus everyone rejoiced with the district when the plate was presented to the district from the state department and the new room was dedicated to Wohelo, representing the camp fire aim of work, health and love.

Dealers Throughout State to Meet In Toledo, Friday.

W. L. Peiter, general manager of the Grand Rapids Overland company, is in Toledo this week, making the final arrangements for the invasion of the Willys-Overland plant by Western Michigan Overland dealers, December 14th, 15th and 16th. Already 100 names have been secured by dealers who will attend the giant sales conference.

Traverse-City-Petoskey dealers and their guests will take a chair car at Traverse and proceed to Grand Rapids. They will join the rest of the bunch on a special train, leaving Grand Rapids, Thursday night, and will arrive in Detroit at 8:00 p. m. The train will then be included in another train of 20 cars which will be pulled into the Willys-Overland yards on the morning of Michigan day, Friday. While the dealers are at Toledo their homes will be in the Pullmans. It is expected that the convention will be one of the largest in commercial history, and the western Michigan dealers are keenly anticipating the trip.

Those who will attend from Charlevoix are Benj. Brown, Alfred Brown and A. J. Usher.

ONE KIND OF CHRISTMAS TREE

In Sweden wooden candelabra like the one in the picture are frequently used instead of Christmas trees for the display of gifts.

Oh, to Have Dwelt In Bethlehem!

O H, to have dwelt in Bethlehem
When the star of the Lord shone bright;
To have sheltered the holy wanderers
On that blessed Christmas night;
To have kissed the tender, way worn feet
Of the mother undefiled
And with reverent wonder and deep delight
To have tended the Holy Child!

Hush! Such a glory was not for thee,
But that care may still be thine,
For are there not little ones still to aid
For the sake of the child divine?
Are there no wandering pilgrims now
To thy heart and thy home to take?
And are there no mothers whose weary hearts
You can comfort for Jesus' sake?

—Adelaide Procter.

The Highland Lassie on Christmas.

Grant in his "Highland Customs" tells how the Scotch lassie rose with the first gray streak of dawn to bake her Christmas sowans, or sour scones, hard oat cakes, soft cakes and pannich paron. The day's enjoyment always consisted of trials of skill and games and wound up with a grand evening meal. In some parts of Scotland, as in England, it became customary to hang a branch of mistletoe in the middle of the room or over the door, and if by accident or otherwise a girl passed under it any young man was privileged to give her as many kisses as there were berries on one of its sprays.

There are more insane in the United States than there are students in colleges and universities.

PRETTY CHRISTMAS CUSTOMS.

In some of the small towns on the Riviera a curious custom takes place on Christmas eve, when at the chief church in the town, during the midnight mass, a number of shepherds from the hills make their appearance wearing the picturesque dress of their calling.

The chief shepherd carries a lamb in his arms and, advancing to the high altar, gives it to the priest as a Christmas offering from the shepherds and a symbol of the Nativity.

In some towns of southern Germany a pretty custom prevails on Christmas eve.

A veiled woman walks through the streets after nightfall, carrying a child, chosen for his beauty and goodness to personify the infant Saviour. The cottage windows are left ajar so that the representative of the Christ Child can leave some gift upon the window sill.

Every good child thus finds an Christmas morning fruit and sweets, but the bad children only receive a birch rod, typical of well deserved chastisement.

DIED THURSDAY OF HEART FAILURE

DEATH TAKES ANOTHER WELL KNOWN PIONEER

Charles H. Stevens Has Been Identified With Growth of Charlevoix County Since 1866.

Charles H. Stevens, pioneer and well known resident af Charlevoix county, died at his home near Phelps, Thursday, December 7, 1916, at 8:30 p. m.

For several years he had been a sufferer from stomach and heart troubles but had had no severe attacks for several months previous to his death. He had not for some time been able to do any heavy work, but had been doing what he could to help in the erection of his new residence, being anxious to move into it before the severe weather.

He returned from work Thursday evening and complained of having felt very badly during the day. He ate a hearty supper and retired early but was forced to get up in a short time by the severe pains in his stomach and heart.

Members of his family did what could be done for him and he said he felt much better but in a very few seconds the change came and he passed away.

Charles Stevens was born in Orange, New Jersey, May 2nd, 1851. When four years of age he came, with his parents, to southern Michigan where the family resided until he was 15 years of age. At that time he came with his parents to Charlevoix county where he resided until the time of his death.

He was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Coleman, November 30, 1873. She died February 17, 1912. To this union seven children were born, of whom six survive him. Mrs. Nellie McElroy, of Phelps; Mrs. Grace Maddock, of East Jordan; Mrs. Mabel Clark, of Barnard; Mrs. Hazel Genet, who was spending the winter with her father; Miss Lela Stevens and Charles H. Stevens, who were still at home. Charles Edwin Stevens, another son, died in early childhood. He also leaves four sisters, Mrs. Elizabeth Wilson, Mrs. Edwin Lewis, Mrs. Fred Mason and Mrs. Ida Dean, and six grandchildren to mourn his loss.

The funeral was held from the Holiness church at Phelps, Sunday, December 10th, the Rev. B. O. Shattuck, of Ellsworth, officiating. The interment was in Brookside cemetery.

COSTS MORE TO BE SICK NOW

Druggists Anticipate Increased Sales In Patent Medicines.

The Antrim - Charlevoix - Emmet County Medical society called the A. C. E. society for short, held its annual meeting Tuesday evening at the Cushman House, Petoskey. Election of officers was held and our own Dr. R. B. Armstrong was elected president for the ensuing year.

Among other subjects under discussion the doctors voted unanimously to increase their fees by 50 per cent at one fell sweep. Said increase to take effect immediately.

Local physicians have already anticipated this action and for the past few months have increased their prices under compulsion of the H. C. of L. We will now all join in the discussion of the high cost of sickness, operations, anesthetics and new babies.

NORDRUM REMAINS LOYAL TO NORTHERN MICHIGAN

Turns Down Excellent Offer to Enter Chicago Offices of Booth Fisheries Company.

Oluf Nordrum, tha genial local manager of the Booth Fisberies company at the Charlevoix atation, recently received a proposition from the general manager of tha company to become connected with a certain department at the head office known as the producing department. This opportunity was presented to him in consideration of his 25 years experience in the fish business and while it is considered quite a step in the way of promotion and Mr. Nordrum did not decline the offer, always being ready to go wherever be could serve tho interests of the company to tha best advantage, he was permitted a choice in the matter and elected to remain in charge at Charlevoix, with considerable territory added to the district.

A district managers' meeting of the Booth company was held in Chicago, December 6th and 7th. Every state in the union was represented and the heads of every department in the head office were in attendance, Vice President and General Manager P. L. Smithers presiding. A very instructive and most interesting time was had and matters of vast importance to the business were brought up and thoroughly discussed, among which various food fishes that never, as yet, have been introduced nor ever known to the trade, was made the aubject of diseussion. Samples of a dozen or more varieties were brought along by the district manager from Seattle, Washington. These were displayed in the form of fresh, frozen, salted, smoked, canned and pickled and while the Chorlevoix manager was exceedingly interested in thesa various kinds of fish and admits tbey were choice goods, he is unwilling to concede that there is any fish in existence that excels the "Beaver Island" perch nor the Charlevoix whitefish, the finest and most delicate fish that "ever eame to net" and it is an undisputed fact that the Cheboygan mullet leads in the eastern market.

At this meeting Dr. Moore, of the bureau of fisheries of Washington, D. C., who was on his way to the Pacific coost, gave n very interesting talk on propagation and other matters in connection with his office and it was considered very fortunate to have him present.

Harmony Grange.

Editor Courier: It has been a long time since you have heard from Harmony Grange, but it has been alive and active if it didn't make mueh noise, seldom missing a meeting and never a leeture hour when there was a meeting.

Our programs have been varied, but the topic that has taken the most time has been the planning for the building of a ball. We had a fine five aere site about one and one-half miles south of Boyne City on the Pleasant Valley road, and last year we had a fine well put down and started excavation and then bonded the Grange for money to go on with, planning to do some of the work ourselves.

To make a long story short, we have had to suspend operation until spring on account of a scarcity of labor, but we have our materials nearly all on the ground. We are building of Notco fireproof blocks, and hope to complete the work early in the spring.

At our last meeting we voted to hold our meetings alternately at the home of the Boyne City members and at the Pleasnnt Valley school house.

We elected the following members to fill the offices for the ensuing year:

Master—L. D. Willson.
Overseer—J. A. Newville.
Lecturer—Miss Muriel Kenny.
Steward—Royal Wott.
Assistant steward—Loyal Watt.
Chaplain—Mrs. E. J. Coykendall.
Treasurer—H. L. Willson.

Gate keeper—O. D. Willson.
Ceres—Miss Leetha Willson.
Pomona—Miss Laura Wooden.
Flora—Miss Lola Willson.

Organist—Mrs. Grnce Wooden.

The next meeting will be held at the home of H. L. Willson, when we will give the first and second degrees to two candidotes.

FARMER HAD TO BE SHOWN

CHANGED CONDITIONS SOON CONVERTED HIM

Mason County Supervisor Put Up a Good Fight But Finally Realizes Mistake.

When tha qnestion of securing a county agricnltural agent was first submitted to the farmera of Mason county, one of the strongest opponents of the proposition was S. D. Squire, supervisor of Sberman township. No smart guy from the agricultural college could tell Mason county farmers anything about farmlng he said. His vigorous protests were made to all who would liston and he used the columns of the Daily News to spreod his views over the county. Supporters of tha proposition came back at Mr. Squire and the contest went merrily on for several weeks, or until the supervisor made a business trip to White Cloud, in Newaygo county, where his conversion occurred.

While waiting for a train to return home, the supervisor entered into conversation with a bystander who explained some changes which had taken ploce during the year in the methods of producing, packing, and marketing Newaygo fruit and farm produce. The men continued their conversation in a fruit packing shed where the stranger showed Mr. Squire how the farmers were profiting by the chnnge which he, the stranger, had introduced. Thoroughly interested by this time, Mr. Squire inquired who the stranger was and was informed that he was talking with H. B. Blnndford, the county agricultural agent of Newaygo county.

Unlike some men, Mr. Squire waa open to conviction. He had seen the light, and he was not ashamed to admit that he had been wrong in his estimation of the value of a county agent. On returning to Ludington he had printed a retraction of his views, and he began to work for the cause with as much enthusiasm as he had formerly opposed it. At the present time R. V. Tanner has been county agent in Mason county for nearly a year and bis wormest friend and supporter is the converted supervisor.

If Charlevoix county farmers and business men are not willing to prove or disprove our need of a county agent by giving the plan a trial for one year, there are 26 counties in the state now employing a man where the working of the system may be studied. However, tho cost of a county agent for one year would tax the average farmer 29.7 cents whieh is 12.5 eents on the thousand dollars voluation, and this smoll amount would barely pay his earfare to the nearest county. Part of the state tax which we pay goes to support county agents in other counties. Isn't it about time we began to ask for the return of some of thia money for our own benefit? The state pays $600 and tbo United States department of agriculture pays $600 to any county employing a county agent.

Entered at Charlevoix Post Office as second class matter.

The Courier does not want to be misunderstood regarding what we said in these columns recently about the local Boy Scout organization. Perhaps, in our enthusiasm for the good that might be accomplished by such a movement and anticipating the arguments of those who would confuse the issue with criticism of conditions not germane to it, we voiced our feeling have given offense to some of our readers. If there are any such to whom our remarks have seemed in the nature of an unmerited rebuke, we crave their pardon and hasten to assure them that it is far from our established policy to indulge in personalities of any kind.

It has long been our belief, however, that questions, essentially public in their nature, such as the matter before us, should be discussed on their own merits and without resort to what might be termed the "Katy did, Katy didn't" style of argument. When men and their methods are the issue, then criticism of men and methods (while always most carefully to be made) is entirely proper. When, however, the object of discussion is a principle, a social movement or a faith, then such criticism is not only entirely out of place but leads one to question the motives inspiring the critic.

Getting down to brass tacks, what we intended to convey by our recent article is that the proposition of having a Boy Scout organization in this town is now open to public discussion and decision. If the Boy Scout idea is a good one for the town to foster then, the proposed board of control, to be formed of committees from the various churches, lodges, etc., can develop it, making such changes in its organization and management as they see fit, to correct any fault or deficiency it may now have. If the idea behind this movement is wrong, or, if the conclusion is reached after a careful study of its history and progress, not only in this place but elsewhere, that its influence is harmful rather than good, then the board can veto the proposition by withdrawing its support.

It seems to us, however, that no decision should be reached without a careful consideration of all the facts. In order to assist our readers in forming an intelligent opinion, we shall print, commencing with this number, a series of articles on the Boy Scout work in this country. This week's article is written by James E. West, Chief scout executive, Boy Scouts of America, and will be found on page ——

A SHADOW OF COMING EVENTS

With her vast energies stralned as never before, by a war such as the world has never heretofore known, with 5,000,000 men on the firing line and every war vessel of her gigantic navy continually under a full head of steam, with her loans to her allies reaching staggering sums and the German submarine making her commerce a matter fraught with difficulties, the United Kingdom increased her sales to us 31 per cent during the nine months ended September of the current year, compared with the same period last year, or from $182,000,000 to $238,000,000. This is $32,000,000 greater than for the first nine months of 1913, under the Republican protective tariff law.. On the other hand our exports to the United Kingdom increased during the period from a normal of $350,000,000 to the unprecedented sum of $1,374,000,000, or over one-third our entire exportation to all the world for the first nine months of 1916. But the things the United Kingdom bought from us were mainly war materials, while the things she sold to us were made up wholly of such products as come into competition with goods "made in America." The trade measures which the United Kingdom is now taking give promise of causing our sales to her to drop even below normal when peace is declared while her sales to us can not help but increase unless a speedy return is made to the Republican policy of protection.

THE BUY EARLY MOVEMENT

The effort to persuade people to buy early their Christmas and holiday purchases has been fairly influential in the larger cities. When one can see personally the strain under which store clerks, mail and express employes live and work for the week before Christmas, this annual scrimmage looks like something both preposterous and cruel.

People living outside the big centers, however, do not quite realize this. In their immediate neighborhood the Christmas season makes no great difference in the lives of the working people. The stores do not have any terrible rush and people work along about as usual.

People who send away Christmas gifts from such localities, however, should realize that the Christmas rush is no joke in the centers of distribution and in the post office and express business. It is a mountain of work piled in a heap on a certain group of people, when it might just as well be distributed over a longer period. So people should begin now to think up their Christmas purchases and get them off as early as they can, marking them if desired, "Not to be opened until Christmas."

No wonder Democratic leaders smile over the effort to give James Hamilton Lewis, of Illinois, credit for the Democratic victory. Hamilton's own state went Republican.

Have you noticed that today all the Democratic newspapers are talking about the high cost of living? Before election it was all prosperity.

Make it a home Christmas for home people with home money in the home town.

SERVED THREE COURSE BANQUET

AT MASONIC TEMPLE LAST THURSDAY EVENING

Charlevoix Commercial Association Return Complement to Gleaners and Grangers.

During the past summer the Charlevoix Commercial association was most royally entertained; at one time by the Ironton Gleaners and again by the Marion Grangers. Last Thursday night, at the Masonic hall in this city, the Commercial association endeavored to repay their erstwhile hosts, in some small measure, for the kindly courtesies shown to them on those former occasions.

A three course banquet was served, at which somewhere in the neighborhood of 200 guests were present, including the rural visitors and the people of the city. The speaker of the evening, John I. Gibson, of the Western Michigan Development bureau, delivered a 30 minute talk, which was all "solid meat" from first to last and thoroughly appreciated by a more than usually attentive audience.

Mr. Gibson handed Charlevoix county quite a little jolt—not wholly undeserved, we fear; on not bearing their proportion of the bureau's expenses, while getting the full benefit of the bureau's work together with the other 19 counties in the state which have been contributing their quota.

He spoke at length on his work at the apple shows, where he has been discouraging emigration from this territory by practical demonstrations of what can be done by a combination of brains and brawn applied to the rich and fertile soil of the western counties.

A selection by the Charlevoix male quartet followed Mr. Gibson's speech, and was heavily encored. The crowd then trooped over to the Majestic theatre in a body, where Mr. Gibson gave them an illustrated lecture, dealing with scenes in western Michigan, which was very interesting and instructive. Many important facts were brought out in this lecture regarding the possibilities and resources of our region, which were practically unknown to some of its long-time residents.

This pleasant social affair is but another step in the rapid growth of the "get-together" feeling, looking to a better understanding and a stronger spirit of co-operation between the farmer, the merchant and the city consumer. One could hear the hope expressed on all sides, last Thursday evening, that these enjoyable occasions of fellowship and good cheer might be often repeated.

JUNIOR CLASS PLANS ENTERTAINMENT

Alma Quartet of Alma College Here On December 28.

The Alma quartet of Alma college has been secured by the junior class of the C. H. S. to be the principal feature of an entertainment to be given under the auspices of the class on December 28th at the Methodist church.

This famous quartet is well and favorably known all over the state and their visit here will be but one of their several stops on a tour which they are making of the northern part of Michigan.

The program will consist of readings and vocal and piano solos and duets. Members of the junior class will canvas the Charlevoix public for the sale of tickets. You are requested to secure seats without delay, as it is expected, judging from the last visit of the quartet to this city, that there will be a rush for admission.

Auction Sale.

The second public auction sale, under the auspices of the Charlevoix Commercial association, will be held Saturday of this week at Hooker's garage.

The first sale, held last Saturday, was very poorly attended. This should not be, as these sales may become weekly institutions of great benefit to the farmer, serving as a clearing house for the disposal of their goods and implements at an exceedingly small cost. All they need is your co-operation, Mr. Farmer. See ad on page 19.

YULETIDE CANDLES

By MARIAN V. DORSEY

EVERY year the little green bayberry candles are sent as luck bringing gifts to su even greater extent than during the past few holiday seasons. The reason for this is that the people who received them the past year or two—and who did not?—thought that they really did seem to bring them good fortune; hence this increasingly rapid growth of the candle's popularity as a substitute for the conventional Christmas card or as constituting in itself an unpretentious little gift symbolizing every good wish.

But, while a great many people both send and receive bayberry candles as gifts, there are but few who know whence they come or why the luck superstition is inseparable from them.

The candles, or "dips," as they were first called, are the product of a revived industry started a few years ago in the old Massachusetts towns of Deerfield and Hingham and in the kitchens of the Cape Cod people, all of them using the old pewter or tin molds that have descended in the families from colonial times. Old southern villages have not as yet realized the opportunity offered its women in this revived industry, although the bayberry candles were made by the early settlers in all the coast colonies where the berries grew, never being found inland.

As to the origin of the good luck idea, we seek it in vain among colonial chronicles as applied to the candle itself. Yet from times far earlier the bay tree and the laurel were considered sacred to good fortune, and it is from this immemorial belief that we must trace the present day faith in the virtues of the bayberry candle.

The bay is a species of laurel, and as poets and victors were crowned with the laurel or the bay, wishing them long life and happiness, so is the same wish conveyed in the bestowal of a candle made of the waxen berries borne by the sacred tree.

Bayberry dips are also made as well as the molded candles. These dips are smaller and less even in shape and show us how candles were made by repeatedly dipping the wicks in the melted wax of the bayberries and drying each layer till the dip was of proper size. That was before molds were introduced, early in the eighteenth century.

To accompany a bayberry candle one should send in the little box in which it is daintily wrapped a card on which is printed, in red and green lettering, the legend:

ON CHRISTMAS EVE.
A bayberry candle burnt to the socket
Brings luck to the house,
Food to the larder
And gold to the pocket.

When these cards are not to be found the luck rime may be written on the back of one's visiting card and wrapped with a candle, but in that case it must not be forgotten that the inclosure of writing necessitates extra postage.

Their color, a soft olive green, blends beautifully with other Christmas decorations, and they burn with a steady flame, emitting a delightfully pungent fragrance, and they are consumed evenly all around without making unsightly gutters or ridges of wax down the sides as ordinary candles do.

From New England comes the tradition that if lovers separated by distance each lights a bayberry candle in honor of the other at the same hour the aroma or incense arising from the burning wick will drift in the direction of the absent one; hence the candles make a strong appeal to young people of romantic temperament.

A candle must be presented to you, not bought by yourself, in order to insure good luck, and you must not light your own; that must be done for you by some other person, not necessarily the donor.

Christmas eve is the time for burning, either at dinner or later, and to follow out the old idea of the laurels and the bays to the victor a candle should surely be bestowed on the relative or friend who has recently achieved some success or won a distinction.—Philadelphia Press.

FIRE DESTROYS FARM HOME

DISCOVERED WHILE OCCUPANTS WERE AWAY

Furniture, Clothing and Building a Total Loss—Save Bunch of Money.

A Bohemian family named Bsnak, living on rural route No. 2, between J. Adams' and Jim Cook's place, and northeast of the town hall, burned out last Thursday afternoon, and while not in strsightened circumstances, have lost all their furniture and must secure a new shelter for the winter.

The fire occurred about two o'clock in the afternoon, when all the family were away, with the exception of one of the men who was plowing in the big field near by. So intent was this man on his work that not until he had approached the house so close that the horse scented the unfamiliar smoke and stopped in his tracks, did he realize that the house was afire and by this time the flames had a good start.

The alarm being given, neighbors quickly gathered to the family's assistance and managed to rescue a few articles of value, among them a trunk containing $700 in bills, all but about $40.00 of which was intact and in negotiable condition. Banek also had ten dollars in a pair of trousers hanging on a wall of one of the rooms. He correctly located the position of the trousers in his mind's eye and when the walls fell in, smothered the fire at that point with a wheelbarrow load of dirt and fished out the trousers, much the worse for wear, but containing the ten dollar bill, only slightly scorched.

About the only consoling feature of the matter is the recovery of this money and the fact that the house was not a new one and the family expected to rebuild in the spring.

Where the Holly Comes From.

Virginia, the District of Columbia and Maryland have the holly habit. Holly has grown there in profusion from the day that no man knows, but it will not continue to grow unless there is a reform in habit and in law. The negroes take to Washington great branches of the holly hacked from the parent stem with reckless disregard of the life of the tree. The holly trees are among the chief beauties of the Potomac hills. They are going the way of the other trees of the Appalachian range, and before long it will be necessary for the lawmakers to follow the lead of the Massachusetts legislature, which was forced to intervene to save the arbutus from the hand of the vandal.

No part of the country perhaps can claim a monopoly of the natural beauties of the Christmas season. There is a glow about the Christmas season in that semisouthern country that is not found in the colder north. It may be the glow of externals only, but it appeals to the eye and to the sympathy. Out of doors there are contrasts in the Potomac region that are not found farther north except in the sections where the evergreens abound. The mountains are white topped, and below them in the valleys are the dead greens of the holly, the laurel and the wild honeysuckle and the dark browns of the oaks, whose leaves do not fall until spring comes.

The public is not accustomed to think of boys and bond issues in the same connection. The last general election in New York state, therefore, has given the public something new to think about.

The state parks committee had before it the problem of presenting to the people of New York state a proposition for the issue of $10,000,000 worth of bonds for the extension of the park system of the state and the preservation of the forests essential to an adequate water supply for the cities of New York.

There are over one and one-half million voters in New York state, and the state parks committee had no facilities for quickly placing before the voters the exact facts upon which to base judgment on this momentous question. It was a non-partisan and non-political proposition. Such questions must be presented on separate ballots. In a presidential election the voter, with three ballots in his hand, might easily overlook and neglect the one which to him seemed of minor importance. Obviously it was necessary thoroughly to arouse and inform the public.

The committee decided to issue an illustrated 24 page pamphlet setting forth the facts, and appealed to the Boy Scouts of America of the state of New York for co-operation in distributing it. The policies and regulations of the Boy Scouts prohibit participation in political or partisan issue, but this issue was found to be non-political and of benefit to all the people. Therefore the executive board authorized that the 1,100 scoutmasters in the state be given an opportunity to volunteer in the distribution of these pamphlets through the members of their troops.

As a result 12,000 boys in the state of New York responded and in a very intelligent and effective way distributed nearly 200,000 of the booklets, thereby giving the voters an opportunity to analyze the merits of the plan. This has resulted in a large vote being cast, with a substantial majority in favor of the bond issue.

In this way the members of the Boy Scouts of America of the state of New York have strikingly illustrated their interest in a big civic movement affecting the public welfare. More than this, in the distribution of these pamphlets and by the thought occasioned incident to their work a very definite conception has been developed in the minds of the boys as to their relationship as individuals to the big problems of the state and nation, and it was brought home to them very vividly that their membership in the Boy Scouts of America meant practical training for citizenship.

Serving the Community.

While this is a most conspicuous and striking example of the training for citizenship by doing instead of by merely acquiring book information, this sort of thing is taking place in every town throughout the country where troops of Boy Scouts are organized. Annual troop reports received at the national headquarters in New York during the past 12 months set forth 1,100 and four different instances of scouts assisting in community clean-up campaigns. Twelve cases are reported in which scouts established public drinking places; 18 of scouts acting as volunteer forestry wardens; 42 in which they have assumed responsibility for raising and lowering the American flag on public buildings; 168 cases in which the scouts have taken some definite responsibility of adding to the attractiveness of their home cities; and 618 in which organized co-operation was given in civic celebrations. In 570 cases scouts have acted as guides or ushers in large conventions or gatherings, such as the G. A. R. encampments, and meetings of societies, associations, and other groups. In six instances scouts have had the responsibility of making a complete census for the authorities. They have conducted 30 "safety first" campaigns, and have had a definite part in conducting 264 municipal Christmas tree festivities.

In addition to all this, numerous cases are reported of scouts performing charitable work, showing kindness to animals, searching for lost persons, delivering circulars regarding some worth-while function, entertaining children in orphan asylums, taking part in Memorial Day, Washington's birthday, Lincoln's birthday, and Fourth of July celebrations. Two hundred and twenty-eight cases of saving persons from drowning are reported.

Varied Activities.

A troop on the Pacific coast reports that, during the year, the scouts served as a reception committee for the State Sunday School Convention, looking after all baggage from the depot and acting as guides; fed several poor families on Thanksgiving and Christmas; fed birds during the snow season.

In the middle west another troop reports that one scout rescued a boy from drowning, and that scouts took an active part in "swat-the-fly," "clean-up," and "safety first" campaigns. The scoutmaster well reports that he is proud of every member of the troop.

A scoutmaster in Michigan reports that a portion of the scouts acted as an information bureau at the American Medical Association Convention. At the annual grammar school excursion the scouts acted as guards at the water front and did "first aid" work. They helped the police to handle traffic during the Christmas rush, took part in Memorial Day parade, and rendered first aid at the state fair held in Detroit.

A troop in Pittsburgh reports supporting a boy in an industrial school, serving as helpers in civic and philanthropic movements, and selling Red Cross seals in post offices at Christmas time.

A New York city troop reports taking part in conservation work and co-operating in the "preparedness" parade, at the conventions of the Federation of Women's clubs and the National Education association, and at the civic celebration on July Fourth.

A colored troop in East Orange reports that at the request of the chief public health officer the boys of their troop cleaned the rubbish and refuse from four large lots and piled it in places convenient for garbage carts. In addition to this they collected the tin cans, rags and rubbish, and bottles of every description along the Lackawanna railroad embankment for five blocks.

Mention should be made of the services of the scouts incident to the Ohio floods in 1913, the inaugural and woman suffrage parades at Washington in the same year, and the disastrous fire in Salem, Massachusetts, in 1914; the services of the scouts at Gettysburg, where 11,000 instances of first-aid work were reported; and in connection with the centennial celebration of the birth of the "Star Spangled Banner" at Baltimore in 1914.

A total of all these reports of various kinds from different troops during the past 12 months aggregate 10,092. For convenience these may be classified as follows:

Acts of courtesy.....1514
Acts of practical aid.....2558

Richardi Sells Holdings.

An important transaction had just been consummated between the Elk Rapids Iron company of Elk Rapids and the Bellaire Hydraulic company of Bellaire whereby the Elk Rapids concern becomes the owner of the pole line of the hydraulic company from Ellsworth to Charlevoix, together with all interests and properties of the latter company at Charlevoix, including the 10 year contract just entered into between the Hydraulic company and the city of Charlevoix, whereby the company is to furnish light for the city and power for such industries as require it.

The Elk Rapids concern will doubtless in time build a line from Elk Rapids to Ellsworth to take up the hydraulic line from there and supply the current from Elk Rapids where there is a great water power at the outlet of the Oxbow.

Fire at East Jordan.

On Saturday morning of last week a little after 11 o'clock, Bert Johnson, clerk in Hite Drug company's store, of East Jordan, noticed a blaze in the millinery shop of Mrs. Boswell just across the street, and gave the alarm; but by the time the department arrived and got it under control, her stock and fixtures were ruined. Mrs. Boswell had left the store and gone home for dinner. The fire in some manner caught from the stove. Mrs. Boswell estimates her loss at $800 on stock and fixtures and she carried $500 insurance. The interior of the room was also damaged by fire and heat.

Got Two Buck Deer.

Although the law allows a hunter to get but one deer in a season, E. P. Richards, of South Branch township, Roscommon county, got two at one shot a few days ago and both were big bucks, too. While hunting he noticed a big deer track and along its path of travel could see that some large obstacle had been dragged. His curiosity being aroused, he started following the tracks and in a short time came upon the object of his curiosity, a large buck dragging another around on the ground. With one shot he dispelled the standing deer, and upon examination found the other had a broken neck and had evidently been dead several days. The bucks had been fighting when their horns became locked and in this manner one had been killed. The survivor had drawn his foe over several miles of country, over fences, logs and trees. They weighed about 150 pounds each.

May Shorten Bird Season.

Major Oats, commissioner of the state game and fish departments, is in Petoskey for a conference with local sportsmen and with David R. Jones, chief deputy, and northern Michigan deputies. Major Oates says sportsmen all over the state are making a special effort to have the open season for partridges cut from 60 to 40 days, October 1 to November 10. One reason for this is of course to conserve the birds and another is to keep the bird hunters and their dogs out of the woods during deer hunting season and thus lessen the likelihood of accidents.—Petoskey Evening News, Dec. 2.

Petoskey Man Charged With Setting Fire.

Assistant State Fire Marshall Robinson, following an investigation made by local officers and his department, has made a complaint in which W. L. McManus, Sr., of Petoskey, is charged with having on the night of October 28 set fire to the dwelling at No. 704 Emmet street, Petoskey, with intent to injure the insurance companies. Insurance of $5,500, in which McManus was interested, was carried on the property and $2,500 insurance, written in his name, was carried upon the household goods.

Struck By Lightning.

The big barn on the farm of Seth Terpenning, near Harbor Springs, was struck by lightning during last Monday night's storm, and destroyed by fire. Six head of cattle were killed and the remaining seven head of cattle and three horses were saved. The loss included 30 tons of hay, straw and considerable grain, machinery, etc. A small amount of insurance was carried.

CHAPTER XII.

That Wooda Rat.

BETWEEN Dexter Allison's monopoly of his time and the persistence with which Miriam Burrell clung to Stephen O'Mara Barbara Allison had opportunity for little more than a perfunctory word or two of greeting that afternoon during the first hour or two that followed a jolting ride on the flat car which trundled them to the head of operations. Almost as soon as her feet touched the ground Miriam's eager survey singled out a tall figure at the edge of the farthest embankment, and in spite of the fact that he was at the moment in sober conversation with white haired, white bearded McLean she crossed instantly to take hold of both of Steve's arms and have his undivided attention. Barbara, at Wickersham's side, glancing now and then in their direction, knew well what subject was engrossing them to the exclusion of all else. But Allison's acceptance of that arrangement as time passed grew less patient.

For a time Allison was content to stroll along with the rest—content with his facetious comments on Elliott's explanation of this, matter or that. Yet whenever his eyes strayed toward Miriam and that other figure whom a week or two before he had designated as "my man O'Mara" his jovinity faltered a little, his manner grew restive. After a time he, too, detached himself and sauntered in the direction of that wholly preoccupied pair.

"See here, my lady," he accosted the girl, who turned extremely bright eyes upon his approach, "this won't do at all! How do you suppose I am going to get a minute with Mr. O'Mara here if you persist in clinging to his elbow? You'll have to run along. You run over and listen with the rest to Elliott's heroic tale of this scarring of the face of nature. I've waited a good many days to talk business with Mr. O'Mara. I'm not going to lose him now I've got him cornered."

Had Dexter Allison been less occupied with other thoughts the face which Miriam Burrell turned toward him would have surprised him if only because of the unusual color burning in her cheeks. At that he was vaguely aware that he had never before seen that quiet, self contained girl so pulsingly happy. She stood and gazed at him a moment, then made him a low and mocking obeisance.

"Don't flatter yourself that I haven't noted your covetous glances," Miriam flashed at Allison. "I've been talking very fast because I knew this interruption was coming. But we've finished, thank you, so I'll leave you to—to bore him now!"

She turned back toward O'Mara. "And thank you," she murmured not very audibly. "Thank you more than I ever thanked anybody before in my life. You've made me very, very happy."

No one could have missed the depth of real thankfulness in those last words. Even Allison stood astonished at it, mouth open, following her rapid withdrawal toward the group fifty yards away.

"Huh-h-h," he snorted. "Huh-h-h. A mighty strange girl!" And then, as abruptly as he had interrupted their low conversation: "Well, how does it go, chief? How does it look to you as far as you've gone?"

No man's good humor could be more infectious than was that of this big, noisily garbed man. Steve smiled and met his cordiality more than halfway.

"Not too bad," Steve answered. "Not too bad." He swept the ground before

"You've made me very, very happy."

them with a short gesture. "You are not beginning to worry, too, are you?"

"Worry?" Allison's frown was barely perceptible. "Why should I? I never let anything worry me. Who is beginning to fret? You aren't, are you? You don't look—much disturbed."

"Not a particle!" Steve still smiled. "I never do, either, unless there is something worth while to make me. I just thought perhaps you might have contracted it from Mr. Elliott. He's been bothered, you see, by the way some of the men are acting. We're short a lot of labor this week."

The big man wheeled and squinted at the droves of men sweating under the unseasonably hot sun. He peered keenly at each clump of laborers, some of them scarcely distinguishable knots of humanity in the distance.

"Not very short," he stated comfortably. "I don't claim to be a wholly competent judge, but it looks to me as though they would be in one another's way if there were any more of them. What's wrong?"

The chief engineer's answer was drawling in its deliberation.

"I wish I knew," he replied. "I wish I could be positive. And there aren't too many of them; they are altogether too few. We're going to need them, and more, too, before we finish, Mr. Allison. Perhaps I'd better figure on—perhaps if they continue to quit us, by twos and threes, as they have in the last week, I'll have to"—

His pause seemed almost an invitation that the other suggest a remedy, and, whether it was or not, Dexter Allison was quick to seize the opening. His suggested solution was heartily bluff.

"Import some more," he said. "When you've employed these men as long as I have—the type of man who has worked all his life on the river—you'll know as well as I do just how uncertain and unreliable they are. What you need is a gang that doesn't want to think for itself. This crowd has too much imagination for a grind like this."

Steve nodded very thoughtfully.

"If it is all imagination," he wondered. "But they're not merely discontented, you see, Mr. Allison. They—they are misleading themselves. They seem to think, from what I've gathered from McLean and a few with whom I have talked, that they are working themselves out of a job for good when they help to build this strip of railroad. They think so. They have been convinced that such is the truth. Personally, however, I feel sure that between us we can correct that impression."

Even though he was looking in the direction of a heavy smoke cloud that had followed a sharp blast to the north of them, Steve felt the weight of Allison's questioning glance.

"We," he echoed. "Where do I figure in it?"

The younger man's upward glance was seemingly surprised.

"You? Why, you're a stockholder. It means as much to you as it does to Mr. Ahnesley and Mr. Elliott."

Allison interrupted him.

"Of course!" he exclaimed. "Surely! I see! What I mean was how in the world can I make them understand that such a fool idea is all wrong? So far as this constructive work is concerned, I'm not an active member. I—I had that understood with Elliott when I went into this thing!"

"Of course," Steve in turn broke in. "I understand that. But they know you; they know that Morrison would be nothing more than a street of well kept lawns and cow pastures if you hadn't seen its possibilities. And so I've already told some of them, Mr. Allison. I've gone even further and given a lot of them my word that you'll guarantee yourself that this is the biggest thing for the good of this section that has yet happened."

The speaker smiled frankly into the bigger man's eyes.

"And that was all they needed, was it?" Allison queried, at length. "That fixed it, did it?"

"Absolutely!" Steve's cheeriness should have been infectious. "Absolutely, Mr. Allison. A lot of people have come to look on your word as law in this country, you know—a lot of them!"

"Hum-m," replied Allison. "Hum-m."

Both of them were quiet for a time. Steve's next remark brought Allison's head up sharply.

"I meant to bring some of my estimates and plans down with me when I came," he told him. "You spoke of wanting to run over the whole proposition with me, you'll remember, the first day you arrived."

Allison nodded shortly. "I remember."

"I'll bring them next trip," Steve finished. "I came so near to losing them last night that I'm taking no chances until they're in duplicate. We can run over them later?"

Allison wheeled and gazed meditatingly toward the group who were slowly moving their way. His daughter, Barbara, with Wickersham at her side, was in the lead.

"Any time," he agreed. "There's no particular hurry."

And then a moment later, just when she was beginning to wonder whether he was purposely avoiding her, Barbara was surprised at the calm ease with which Steve took her away from her tall escort. She had noticed that Wickersham and Steve had not touched hands when they first met, an hour or two before, nor even hinted at such a salute. But now, as earlier in the day when her dash toward the stables had left him standing rigid in the middle of the lawn, she failed to see the expression that settled upon Wickersham's long face. It was Dexter Allison this time who noticed it, and hours later, when he and Wickersham sat and faced each other in the downstairs room in the house on the hill which served as Allison's office, he remembered and recognized it.

"You wanted to talk with me?" Wickersham inquired as he entered the room that evening.

Somehow Wickersham's unending politeness had always irritated Allison. That night his smoothly infectionless question nettled him.

"Your infernal fool, Harrigan, bungled last night!" he blurted out. "He messed things up beautifully. He not only failed, but he failed to get away without being seen. That's what comes of intrusting a job like that to a drunken sot."

Wickersham seated himself—sat and caressed a cigarette. Coolly he waited and blinked his eyelids.

"My man?" he murmured. "My man?"

"Ours, then," Allison corrected sharply—"ours." Then he seemed to recollect himself and his voice became less abrupt. "Listen. This afternoon I had a talk with O'Mara—that is, I started to have a talk with him, but—but he beat me to it. And in just about three minutes he told me that he'd caught Harrigan on the job—not mentioning any names, I don't mean—but in didn't need to. And he told me more than that. He as good as gave me to understand that he'd know where to place the blame if there was any more interference with his men."

Wickersham crossed a long leg and blew a thin blue streamer of smoke.

"Yes?" he intoned hollowly.

It brought a blaze to Allison's eyes, that nerveless monosyllable.

"That doesn't interest you, eh?" he snapped. "Doesn't interest you at all! Well, it does me. Three months ago I bought into this affair because I was as sure as any man could be that I'd collect 100 per cent on my money next spring. Elliott and Ahnesley? Pah! Nice gentle old ladies when it comes to a game like this. They're anachronists; they are honest business men twenty years behind the times. You've heard of taking candy from children? Well, that's what it looked like then. But it doesn't look that way any longer. Talk with you? Yes, I did want to talk. I wanted to tell you that if you'd like to switch I'm willing right now. I wanted to tell you that if you'd rather be a good little boy and get into line I'm willing, and more than willing.

"I'm going to beat that blanked wooda rat."

Because I can promise you, since I talked it over with O'Mara this afternoon, that we haven't any nice, dead sure thing on our hands any longer.

"Oh, you can sit there and smile your cold blooded smile! And if you think I'm experiencing pangs of conscience you're mistaken. All I have I got from other men who—who weren't strong enough to hang on to it. There isn't any friendship in business, or if there is I never played it that way. I'm just telling you that now is our one opportunity if we want to join hands and hurrah with the rest of them for the completion of this job by next May. We lose a railroad at a bargain, perhaps, but we've still got a mighty good right of way to the border that will insure our welcome in the ranks. Maybe we lose and—and maybe—well, I never did like to be beaten! Nor do I say that such an argument will have any weight with you, but it's a chance to be on the dead level for once. What do you say? Do we switch?"

"Switch," Wickersham snarled. And he leaned forward, face bloodless, and beat upon a chair arm. "Switch now!" He laughed shrilly. "Why, I'm going to beat that blanked woods rat in his matinee idol costume so bad between now and next May that he'll be walking the roads for his next job. Switch? I'm going to brand him as the worst incompetent that ever dragged two poor fools down into pauperism. I'll see him broke. I'll wipe that infernal smooth smile from his lips if I have to"—

Wickersham gasped. He came to his feet panting all in an instant with the rage that set his dry lips writhing. But at that point he, too, remembered himself. He swallowed and faced Allison, and the latter, sitting pop eyed before his outbreak, gaped now at the change that came back over that twisted face. Wickersham smiled. Once more his bearing was the very essence of perfect poise and self control.

"If you—if you are afraid"— he inferred. "If you"—

Allison's laugh was big and booming for all that the astonishment had not yet left his eyes.

"Cold feet," he rumbled. "Cold feet! Me!" And suddenly his gust of mirthless laughter made petty the other's insolence. "Wickersham, I've broken better crooks than you'll ever be. A man has to have a big heart to be a big crook, and you—and you—well, sometimes I wonder whether there wasn't some sort of an oversight in that line when they put you together.

He couldn't have explained why the thought came to him at that moment any more than he understood his swiftly malicious impulse to use it, but all in a flash there came back to him a recollection of that day when he and Caleb had burst through the hedge to find the boy Stephen O'Mara pummeling a bigger prostrate boy who shrieked under the earnest thoroughness of that pummeling. Allison, too, rose to his feet.

"I only wanted to give you a chance," Allison continued. "I reckon I can take care of myself. I always could. And you—well, you know as well as I do what sort of scrap that—that woods rat can put up, or you ought to. He gave you a sort of a demonstration once, if I remember correctly. I stick! I never was overly squeamish. But don't fool yourself, Archie; don't fool yourself. If we fight we're fighting with a regular guy, your insinuation to the contrary. I merely wanted you to realize what I know now. We'll think we've been in a battle before we come to a finish!"

His hand was on the door knob when the door itself flashed open. Dexter Allison's daughter hesitated, surprised, on the threshold. Her eyes, brilliantly alight, leaped from her father's face to that of the man half toward her and back again.

"Oh," she exclaimed uncertainly, "I didn't know you were busy. I saw the light. I'd been over to Uncle Cal's just for a minute. I want to tell you. Good night!"

WORK OF THE BOY SCOUTS

Distinctive services to the community 6020

The Daily "Good Turn."

Necessarily, the reports which come to the national headquarters reveal only to a limited degree the extent of practical services rendered; and for the most part the reports nre based upon collective action by the scouts as a troop. In addition to the services rendered by troops, it should be remembered that the 200,000 boys registered as members in good standing (as well as many of the half-million additional who have had the benefit of the scout training in the past) faithfully carry out the requirement of a "daily good turn."

Many of the daily good turns are of a distinctively civic character. It is because of this showing—that is, the actual doing of things worth while along lines of civic and community value—that the Boy Scouts of America has the active interest and co-operation of nearly 50,000 men on the basis that it is a movement for citizenship training of the most practical character. Indeed, most of the men believe that this training is of greater value than that which is given in our public schools of higher education where they have the benefit of special teachers and special courses in civics. The distinction between the training given in the schools and that given by the scout movement is that in the schools the training is largely book knowledge, while with the scouts the training is based upon the actual doing of things of a civic character which are worth while. In other words, action, not words, typifies the scout movement.

Scout "Preparedness."

The motto of the movement is "Be Prepared." It should be remembered that this motto was selected long before the present agitation for preparedness took hold of the people of America. The preparedness of the scout movement is of the most practical character, and is more far-reaching in its significance and practical value than preparedness simply for military purposes. It is preparedness for right living, for active participation in the life of the community, and for all-around citizenship.

The Scout Law.

Every member of the Boy Scouts of America is obligated by his oath to do his duty to his God and his country, to obey the Scout Law, to be helpful to others at all times, and to keep himself physically strong, mentally awake, and morally straight. The Scout Law is as follows:

1. A Scout is trustworthy.
   A Scout's honor is to be trusted. If he were to violate his honor by telling a lie, or by cheating, or by not doing exactly a given task, when trusted on his honor, he may be directed to hand over his Scout badge.
2. A Scout is loyal.
   He is loyal to all to whom loyalty is due; his Scout leader, his home and parents, and his country.
3. A Scout is helpful.
   He must be prepared at any time to save life, help injured persons, and share the home duties. He must do at least one good turn to somebody every day.
4. A Scout is friendly.
   He is a friend to all and a brother to every other Scout.
5. A Scout is courteous.
   He is polite to all, especially to women, children, old people, and the weak and helpless. He must not take pay for being helpful or courteous.
6. A Scout is kind.
   He is a friend to animals. He will not kill nor hurt any living creature needlessly, but will strive to save and protect all harmless life.
7. A Scout is obedient.
   He obeys his parents, scoutmaster, patrol leader, and all other duly constituted authorities.
8. A Scout is cheerful.
   He smiles whenever he can. His obedience to orders is prompt and cheery. He never shirks nor grumbles at hardships.
9. A Scout is thrifty.
   He does not wantonly destroy property. He works faithfully, wastes nothing, and makes the best use of his opportunities. He saves his money so that he may pay his own way, be generous to those in need, and helpful to worthy objects. He may work for pay, but must not receive tips for courtesies or good turns.
10. A Scout is brave.
    He has the courage to face danger in spite of fear and to stand up for the right against the coaxings of friends or jeers or threats of enemies, and defeat does not down him.
11. A Scout is clean.
    He keeps clean in body and thought, stands for clean speech, clean sport, clean habits, and travels with a clean crowd.
12. A Scout is reverent.
    He is reverent toward God. He is faithful in his religious duties, and respects the convictions of others in matter of custom and religion.

The Scout Work and Methods Appeal to Boys.

The report of what scouts hnve done during the past 12 months throughout the whole country is convincing evidence of the interpretation by its members that the scout movement is a most potent factor for citizenship training.

These things which the scouts do as a result of the virile, unselfish leadership of men devoted to our country are but a natural expression of scout trnining for citizenship. These practical and worth-while results are made possible by reason of the attractiveness of the scout program of activities, which appeal so strongly to hoy nature, and thereby capitalize the boy's gang instinct by organizing groups of eight boys into patrols and three or more patrols into troops, requiring them to pass tests in subjects not taught adequately in our public schools, but which have tremendous value in making consistent the scouts' motto, "Be Prepared." These activities include not only the practical knowledge of things worth while, but a test of the ability to do things—such as knot-tying, signalling, first aid, map-making, camping, cooking, agriculture, archery, personal health, public health, physical development, swimming, life-saving, etc., etc. This program holds the interest of the boy and makes possible the accomplishment of the real objective of scouting, which is character development and training for citizenship.

The 18,000 men serving as scoutmasters and assistant scoutmasters, and the 28,000 additional men serving as members of troop committees and local councils and special officers, nre giving from five to thirty hours a week in volunteer service because of a definite conviction that through scouting they are making a definite patriotic contribution to our country in citizenship training.

These men realize that our country needs a more distinctive conviction on the part of the men of tomorrow as to their responsibility, as well as their privileges, as citizens of our republic. By giving supervision and direction to the manner in which boys spend their leisure time, they are endeavoring to teach them discipline, a proper regnrd for the rights of others, practical ideas as to hygiene, and ability to care for themselves and to know what to do in any emergency. Furthermore, they are endeavoring to give boys, during their adolescent years, a practical interpretation both of our history, and also of their own opportunity as future citizens through practicnl instruction in patriotism.

Supplementary to the Scouting program of outdoor activities, the movement recognizes the fact that boys spend much of their leisure time in reading, and has made available expert leadership and advice to the boys' reading program together with a high-class monthly magazine for boys called Boys' Life—the Boy Scouts magazine—and a selected list of fiction books in the form of its Every Boy's Library.

All-Around Citizenship, Rather Than Technical Military Training.

Much has been said during the past two years about the question of military training, and many enthusiastic advocates of preparedness have sought to impose a part of the burden of the preparedness movement upon the growing boys of our country. The men who are devoting themselves to the Boy Scout Movement almost unanimously agree with the military authorities the world over that the most essential things in the proper training of growing boys are included in the program of the Boy Scouts of America. They believe that if this program is efficiently carried out it will result in mnking available young men, sound in body, with a pntriotic conception of their responsibilities to the nation, in a way which is far more prnctical than would be the case if the time of these boys were consumed during their adolescent years with purely technical military training. It is believed by the men in the scout movement that the purely technical military training can be best given under the auspices of different agencies, and should not crowd out things which are essential for practical citizenship training.

For these reasons the Boy Scout movement, although only barely started, and with less than six years' bistory in our country, has commanded the support of the foremost leaders in every walk of life, including some of our most promlnent educators.

Theodore Roosevelt has recently characterized the Boy Scout movement as "distinctly an asset to our country for the development of efficiency, virility, and good citizenship." President Wilson says: "It is fine to have the boys of our country organized for the purposes the Boy Scouts represent. . . . I am proud of their manliness." Among many educational experts who bave been interested in the movement, Dean Russell, of the Teachers' college of Columbia university, has expressed himself at length. He regards the Boy Scaut movement as "one of the most valuable educational agencies of this generation," and hopes "to see the time when every American boy will look forward ta being a good scout and will be trained to incorporate the ideals of the bay scout inta his life as an American citizen."

The Call for Scoutmasters.

The marvellously successful development of the movement dnring the past six years has been made possible only because of the unselfish devotion of thousands of men who bave aerved as scoutmasters. The opportunity for the further extension, so as to reach a larger proportion of the eight million boys who are eligible for membersbip, is dependent entirely upon the number of high-grade men wbo are willing to volnnteer their acrvices for positions of leadership in tbe organization.

In all parts of our country more men are needed. All who are willing to help in any way will receive definite advice upoa application to our national headquarters in the Fifth Avenue Building, New York city.

And will marry me, dear,

JUDGES DON'T REPORT FINES

INTENT OF STATE AUTOMOBILE LAW LOSES ITS EFFECT

Many Auto Speeders "Pinched" Throughout State But Only a Few Are Revealed.

The first "black list" of automobile owners and drivers under the 1915 automobile license law was published last week by the secretary of state.

It contains the names of 650 men and women who have been arrested and fined in Michigan for violation of the automobile law.

Under the law justices of the peace, municipal judges and others who have jurisdiction are supposed to report to the secretary of state the names of the persons they fine and the amounts of the fines. Only 36 justices and judges took the trouble to report their cases, and with the exception of Grand Rapids, the larger counties are hardly represented at all. Wayne county, for instance, has a report of only two cases, and Justice of the Peace S. E. Campbell, of Plymouth, made the report.

Fines 248 in Grand Rapids.

Police Judge Frank A. Hess, of Grand Rapids, is entitled to all the honors. From January 11 to October 1, he fined 248 auto drivers. Unlike most of the others who have reported, Justice Hess confined his activities to his fellow citizens. Of his 248 fines all but three were residents of Grand Rapids.

Justice Albert W. Campbell, of Birmingham, Oakland county, is credited with second place. He did not begin work until April 8, but since that time he has fined 114. With the exception of three, Justice Campbell's victims all came from other counties. He had just three from Oakland county and the list of the others looks like a page torn from the Detroit, Saginaw and Flint "social register."

Down Ypsilanti way, too, Martin B. Stadtmille, judge of Ypsilanti's municipal court, and Justice of the Peace Derwin Z. Curtis, of Ypsilanti township, also did good business. The former got 51, with only one from Ypsilanti. The others registered from Detroit, Birmingham, Wyandotte and Ann Arbor, Justice Curtiss had seven from Detroit, one from Wyandotte and two from Ann Arbor.

Thirty In Muskegon.

Grand Rapids speeders and violators turned up in the reports from two justices of the peace in Muskegon. One justice, Elmer E. Rosenberry, had 20, and Justice Christopher M. Gibney had 10. While Justice Robinson, of Holland, had 62. Other justices with the number of violations they report are: Fidus E. Fish, city of Allegan, one; Ogden Tomlinson, Gun Plain township, Allegan county, two; Alonzo Cadwallder, city of Hastings, eight; William Allen, Williams township, Bay county, five; Leo A. Donohue, Dowagine, nine; J. Charles Flynn, St. Johns, six; Anron B. Kriger, Petoskey, two; J. A. Maun, Alma, one; John P. Bishop, Litchfield, one; Charles M. Weaver, Hillsdale, four; A. L. Spencer, Belding, four; Arthur W. Wiggins, Jackson, six; Miles Mulford, Cedar Springs, one; Albert H. Perkins, Lapeer, one; Sylvester P. Hosmer, Tecumseh, two; Alanson B. Treat, six; Virgil A. Fitch, Ludington, eight; Jesse C. Vliet, Big Rapids, one; Fred A. Gleason, Greenville, one; Isaac N. Tubbs, Grand Haven, 49, mostly from Chicago; Fred T. Miles, Holland, four; John F. Kaiser, Chesaning, two; Robert McBride, Corunna, six; G. F. Friegel, Owosso, one; James W. Beck, Sturgis, three; William E. Johnson, Sturgis, seven; William G. Doty, Ann Arbor, one; Walter R. Ardis, Cadillac, one.

Small Percentage Reported.

The state officials do not think that the list just published contains all who have been convicted and fined in the state during the last year. They think this list contains only a small percentage of the total.

"Many are pinched, but few are reported," is the way Deputy Luskputs it.

The theory upon which the law operates is the dissemination of the information to all justices of the peace. After this list is sent to each justice, a man who appears before him then is likely to get a double dose provided his name is in the "black list." Whether the scheme works or not depends entirely upon the reports made.

AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION SCHOOLS

Ironton Selected for One In March—Farmers Urged to Attend.

One of the many means used by the Michigan agricultural college in bringing modern agricultural methods and the results of scientific research in farm problems to the people of the state is the agricultural extension school. These schools are promoted by the director of college extension, Mr. R. J. Baldwin, of East Lansing. The extension department has on its staff the 26 county agents, the field agents from the various college departments, the women demonstrators from the domestic science department, and the state leaders of boy's and girl's clubs. The schools are conducted by some two or three of the members of the college extension staff and lasts for five days. Several topics of local importance are covered by lectures and demonstrations. All interested farmers who enroll for the work are expected to attend regularly and help with the demonstrations.

The community desiring an extension school makes application for the same to the director of college extension. There is no expense connected except hall rent, fuel, etc. This is borne by those attending the school. Counties employing a county agent are given first consideration in placing these schools, for the county agent acts as local manager and experience has shown that schools in such counties are always most successful.

Director Baldwin has signified his intention of giving this county an extension school to be held early in March at Ironton. This may be considered a recognition of the progressiveness of Charlevoix county farmers and all are urged to give the school in return the very best support possible.

Christmas at Christ's Birthplace

At last I am come to the market place, at one end of which stands the Church of the Nativity, marking the holy, lowly birthplace, says a writer in Army and Navy Life. There is only one entrance from the street, and it is so low that in entering one is forced to bow the head and assume a posture of reverence. When once inside I raise my eyes I feel the lashes wet.

The ceiling is lofty, the walls whitewashed and bare, while the ancient dark beams and rafters add to the air of extreme simplicity. There are long rows of marble pillars, once adorned with paintings, that are all but faded now, and of the once glittering mosaics of the clerestory only fragments remain. Coming into the choir and apse, the scene is suddenly changed. There are numerous altars of divers ownership under a constant and jealous guardianship of Latin, Greek and Armenian. Over these various claims there has been much and bitter dissension; blood has been spilled more than once. In fact, as all the world knows, the Crimean war began with a mob riot in the Church of the Nativity—sacrilege of sacrilege!—and here was born the Prince of Peace!

Down the dark and winding stairs, slippery with the drippings of countless candles, I make my way to that lowly place into which first came the light of the world. The grotto of the Nativity is a cavern beneath the church, long, narrow and low ceiled, with pendent lamps of precious metal and rare workmanship lighting the gloom. The floor is marble, and wonderful old tapestries, pictures and silk hangings cover the walls. A marble cradle in one corner commemorates the manger, and in a recess on one side a dozen or more hanging lamps are ranged around in a half circle.

BEND LOW AND KISS THE GROUND FOR CHRIST'S SAKE.

Before the altar there all men bend low and kiss the ground for Christ's sake, for it is here a silver star is set to mark the birthplace of him whom his mother called Jesus. The center of the star is glass, and through it one may see the original rocky floor of the stable. To the north of the grotto underneath the floor one may also see the cave in which St. Jerome spent many peaceful years translating the Bible into Latin.

The effect of the whole is impressive, but in an unfamiliar way. I am conscious of a feeling that is almost resentment against the lamps and tapestries and the marble floor. They seem to level to the cheapness of worldly riches a spot that, of all places on earth, should have been allowed to remain tranquilly humble and dimly sacred, true to the character of its holy, transcendent memory.

I close my eyes for a moment, while mind and heart rebel against the present, until it vanishes and the atmosphere of the past, in all its deep and wondrous mystery, returns to envelop my soul. "I am here, in Bethlehem," I whisper to myself, and beyond closed lids I see the Virgin mother with her gentle face as the old masters loved to picture her and a "light that never was on land or sea" in her beautiful mother eyes, while the glory from one low hanging star touches a Baby's hair. The fragrant scent of new hay is in my nostrils, I hear the soft breathing of nearby cattle, and above the murmur of pilgrims' prayers the voice of the Magi is saying, "Lo, we have seen his star in the east and are come to worship him."

To Light Yule Log Properly.

There are thousands who still firmly believe that to light the Yule log with the charred remains of its predecessor of a year ago means twelve months of good luck for the provident householder and his family. But it has always been considered an evil omen if a squinting person, a barefooted person or, worst of all, a flat footed woman enters the room while the log is burning.

"The Builder of Bridges."

World Film Corporation presents the five-part photoplay, "The Builder of Bridges," based upon the play of the same name by Alfred Sutro.

C. Aubrey Smith is "The Builder of Bridges." The character is one that suits this well known actor's manly and vigorous style. The bridge builder is a big man physically and mentally. His stage career has been identified with parts like that of Edward Thursfield in this photoplay. Another prominent actor in the cast is G. W. Anson.

Marie Edith Wells, a beautiful girl and a charming actress, plays opposite the builder of bridges. The brother of the girl he loves commits a big theft, and Thursfield makes good the deficit. The girl's jilted suitor accuses her of selling herself to Thursfield. The brother repays Thursfield and he and the girl pair off happily, after a temporary estrangement.

Bridge-building on a vast scale is shown in the picture, which includes some striking incidents and thrills.

Majestic, Friday, December 15.

The "Christmas Grouch"

THE Christmas grouch dies hard, but he begins to breathe feebly. There is scarcely a family but has a Christmas grouch—some one who thinks gifts are foolish and that a great deal of money is wasted at the season now upon us. He hates to see money wasted; he hates to see the Christmas trees cut down; he thinks it is a sin to tell the children the legend about Santa Claus; he scolds about shopping; he is sorry for the postman who carries so many bundles; he says everybody runs into debt at Christmas and that the new year gets started in all wrong on account of the debts; he says the sentiment has all gone out of Christmas on account of its being commercialized and that Christmas trees are a menace to life and that once he knew of a house that caught fire from a Christmas tree; he says it is a sin to spend money for flowers at Christmas.

The Christmas reformer has hundreds of ideas about how Christmas can be improved. He says the Christmas holidays never mean anything to him and he will be glad when they are all over.

But Christmas remains Christmas just the same, for all the grouch's protests, and will be the same forever; will laugh at the grouch and his follies in such a wholesome, hearty way that he will grow ashamed and will join in the merrymaking in spite of himself.

Some Christmas Celebrations

IN many homes the same customs are followed year after year at Christmas. Thus in one home where there are always visitors for the holidays an enormous square wicker hamper which has done service in the same capacity for twenty years is brought from the storeroom and placed in the general hall. Festive holly wreaths are tied to the handles and to the top with big red bows, giving it a decidedly holiday appearance. As gifts arrive they go at once into the hamper. On Christmas morning after breakfast the father of the family opens the hamper and with fitting ceremony and humorous remarks distributes the gifts.

A large bag resembling a mail pouch and made of brown and tan denim with "U. S. Mail" marked in large black letters on it hangs each Christmas season near the fireplace in the large living room of another house. Into this are slipped family presents and those sent by outsiders. The leather strap which fastens the bag is regarded as sacred, and no one would think of tampering with Santa Claus' property till Christmas morning.

A huge red Christmas stocking, large enough to hold all the family gifts, makes its annual appearance in a western home. It is constructed of a firm bright red cotton cloth and a barrel hoop encircles the top, holding it open. It is suspended by wide red ribbons from the second floor stairs landing, and before Christmas boxes and packages of all sizes and kinds are dropped in from above. On Christmas morning the family gathers beneath this well filled receptacle, which is lowered and dragged by the ribbons into the center of the living room, where the contents are distributed.

Several years ago the young daughter of another family established a little custom which is still carried out each Christmas eve. On large red placards, hung with red ribbons, she writes with phosphorus the names of the different members of the family. These she places about the room. The mother's card hangs over the piano, on which her gifts are to be laid. Over the library table is suspended the father's card, designating his allotted space. The deep window seat, the davenport, etc., are other places assigned to other members of the family. Late Christmas eve all the lights, except a dim flicker in the hall, are extinguished, the armfuls of presents are brought down, and by means of the bright signs the gifts are put in their proper places.

For the past ten years a miniature sleigh drawn by six papier mache reindeer has appeared on the Christmas breakfast table of a New England family. Surrounding jolly little St. Nick, who, seated in the sleigh, holds the red lines, are piled the choice gifts, those that fit into small packages, such as jewelry and money. The boxes are opened before breakfast is served, and the Christmas tree festivities come later in the morning.

A pretty custom observed by several musical families is for the entire household to come downstairs together early in the morning singing carols.

In some homes the celebration begins on Christmas eve. At a country place near New York the custom is to have a small tree hung with joke gifts in the center of the dining room table. Piled about the tree in the collection of substantial worth while remembrances. After the latter have been distributed the family and house guests adjourn to the main room, which is hung with garlands of holly and mistletoe. Then the Yule log is brought in and laid on the andirons of the big fireplace. The lights from the blaze and from numerous candles furnish the only illumination. While the gifts are taken from the miniature tree and the attached sentiments read the health of Santa Claus is drunk.

SCHOOL COMMISSIONER'S NOTES

A brim full joyful week. Seven schools visited in Chandler, previously quaranteened for infantile paralysis. Township teacher's meeting with every teacher present. Two little short calls in Melrose. Report work straightened up in Evangeline. Two schools in Bay visited that were formerly passed by because of potato vacation. Bay number 3 has a school house newly plastered and has improved the seating conditions, to some extent. They have 11 new books for their library. They are worthy of second notice. Odds and ends cared for in Boyne City. Cleanings in Advance. Standard plate presented to Hayes No. 2, and a district vegetable display in the Mountain school to round up the week.

Maple Grove school was dismissed on Thursday afternoon in order that their teacher might witness the presenting of the standard plate in the Hopyard school.

A worth while week spent with the girls and boys and fathers and mothers. Walloon Lake primary room has exchanged the prize money won at the county fair last fall for a pencil sharpener, bookcase and little folks reading material. Everything going nicely at Clarion. The Forest Hill school earned $9.60 at a Xmas social with a purpose of making the little souls happy when Santa Claus comes. The parents in this neighborhood surprised the teacher with a Thanksgiving dinner on Wednesday the 29th, and the school feels so encouraged at the active hearty interest thus shown, that their eyes continue to shine with joy and anticipation. During the summer the school board had the wood shed repaired, lowered the black boards, built now steps, remodeled the halls to provide warm, separate cloak rooms, installed two chemical toilets, and bought new adjustable, single seats. This is the school formerly known as the Camp 23 school, technically, Chandler No. 6, and is composed largely of waste, cut over lands and slashings. Maybe this district is far from the post office, but the school spirit and thoughtful activities are enough to make some of our larger and more prosperous districts sit up and take notice.

Chandler No. 5, the old Blaine school, has all new adjustable seats now. Sorry not to have known it sooner, for this is another bit of worthy activity from the wooded hills of Charlevoix county. Next time you go by old Camp 29, stop in and visit the school. The artist visited the Mackey school and left on its walls four of his masterpieces. The Sneider school, in east Chandler, report a new fountain, bookcase, maps and dictionary stand. And the water supply problem still unsolved. The Gill school, Chandler No. 4, let us know about their new belfry and school bell some time ago, but it seemed good to rejoice with them at the sound of the bell. Miss Blanchard in Hudson No. 5 netted $12.50 at a pie social purpose of which was to buy Xmas presents for the girls and boys.

Mrs. MacIntosh reports unusual success in the selling of tuberculosis seals throughout the entire county. Four thousand on Wednesday sold in Boyne City alone, and some of the rural teachers have asked for a second supply.

See the story of the Hopyard school in another column of this paper. It is the story of a community soul if you read between the lines. Miss Katherine Lalonde held the first annual corn and vegetable show at the Mountain school Friday afternoon. Few prizes in money were offered and many special prizes were offered by the Boyne City merchants. It is a good movement with the farm life ideal as its central motive.

The director of the Walker school reports that the long delayed shipment of seats and black boards arrived at the school in good condition and that it makes a great deal of difference in the looks of their school room. We agree with him knowing that they have a good school and knowing further that it would make a big difference anywhere.

Pilgrim social in the German Settlement and a clear gain of $30.50 in one fell swoop. This means that they have ordered a new organ and that the teacher can pay half towards a drinking fountain and the school board will furnish the rest. They are rejoicing also over a large order of library books including many for the little folks.

There are two cement block school houses in the county. One confronts daily the heating problem, how to keep warm. The other is confronted with a second serious problem, how to keep dry. Uncle Obidiah would like to learn the sure solution and to see that solution effectively applied.

At the first of the week there had been but 15 children reported who had gained the necessary 500 or 1,000 home credits for the school year. And now at the close of the week we find the following wonderful records awaiting us, four complete from the Curfew school, one from the Tainter school, four from the Clark school, three from the Harmon school, eight from the Sand Bay or Green Town school, and three from the Three hills school. Space forbids our publishing the names this week.

Printed for the third time but by request:

The eighth grade reading examination will be based on Tubal Cain, published in classic form by Miss Lucy A. Sloan and sold at 10c plus postage per copy, by D. A. Wright, state agent, Lansing, Michigan. Best not to start studying it before February.

And the half has not been said.

Yes, Do It Now

DO your shopping early while the good things are on tap.
Grab the early bargains while they're on the bargain map.
Don't be one of those kites that hit the shopping trails
When all the clerks are weary after forty thousand sales.
What's the use of loafing while the early shoppers win?
When you are sweating lava, those same early birds will grin!

Christmas eve the pleasant girls who ladle out the toys
Will be so worn and weary they'll have no Christmas joys.
Haven't they a right to holler at your putter and delay?
Pray leave them strength to celebrate a bit on Christmas day!
If you put off your shopping till the very last hour,
I hope you draw a lemon that is second-hand and sour!

The tardy shopper blithely said, "A Merry Christmas girlie!"
The clerk replied, "If you were dead or did your shopping early
We could enjoy a little fun around our Christmas table,
But slow-pokes keep me on the run, till Christmas joy's a fable."

VAN PELT'S TOURING DIARY

Wellesley Hills, Massachusetts,
October 7, 1916.

We arrived here the morning of the 4th inst. and have been busy ever since seeing Boston and one day we went to the Brockton fair. It is supposed to be really the best fair in the United States. The day we were there the attendance on paid tickets was 66,000, and it surely was a corking good fair.

The best time made at the races was 2:09, and it was not to me one bit more interesting than our Charlevoix fair at East Jordan last month. Speaking of fairs reminds me that our fair there is not patronized as it should be, as I look at it.

We should show up our big pumpkins, apples, etc., and bring more people there—even if some of us have to put up some money for special prizes and attractions.

The weather continues fine, quite like summer and the country is beautiful to drive through. But Hubert says, "Oh, I don't see how the people live here and make any money, it's so rough and stony." The only thing I could think of at the moment was that when our Pilgrim fathers landed here at Plymouth, they found it so rugged, rough and stony that they at once concluded it would be a good place to bring up a hardy race of people and people who have to work hard we know do not get into so much mischief as those who are idle. He replied, "Well, I'd rather be a little more idle and have more than to work so hard and have so little." So I let him off with telling him he could be more idle and work more and get all there was in it. He said he didn't understand and I said neither did I.

Yours,
VAN PELT.

CHARLEVOIX HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

Miss Cole has learned a great deal about some of the famous authors since receiving the book reports of her English classes, and is still awaiting more marvelous knowledge when the freshies hand theirs in.

The English IV. class has finished Hamlet and started in on King Lear. We hope he will survive.

Bob Sloan is absent from our midst. Cause, the "grip." Miss Horst certainly misses his pleasant little smile in the assembly room.

All of Mr. Loomis' classes are rejoicing over the fact that he is going to allow them to hand in their note books this week. How many experiments are you ahead, Socrates?

Pellston arrives here Friday to furnish us our first victory in basket ball. A good attendance is wished, because we want you to see us win. Although the foot ball team may have disappointed you the basket ball team certainly will not.

Miss Roberta Ferguson and Mr. Harold Cartier are on their way to wealth and fame by furnishing us with one of "these here dances" where the boys may attend flat broke. The fellows hope the girls won't try to set us an example by showing how easily they can spend their money.

The senior class rings arrived last week, C. O. D. Mr. Aseltine and Bob Merriam are still waiting hopefully for the return of their loan of $6.70 to get them (the rings) out of the clutches of George Finucan.

We read about the expulsion of 26 Detroit high school girls for inaugurating an "odd sock day." Praying Mr. Craig for leniency, why the blazes don't the girls here try it?

W. C. T. U. HOLD AN INTERESTING MEETING

Many Excellent Papers and Recitations Feature Meeting.

The meeting of the W. C. T. U. at the home of Mrs. Fred H. Thomas on Friday of last week was one of unusual interest. Notwithstanding the unpleasantness of the day, there was a good attendance of members and visitors.

At the opening of the meeting a memorial service was held for one of the deceased members of the organization, Mrs. H. B. Jacobs.

Special music, "Nearer My God to Thee," as an instrumental solo, was played by Miss Margaret Saunders.

The president gave some selections of scripture which was very appropriate.

Mrs. Walker read a beautiful poem. A duet, "Face to Face," was sung by the Misses Jennie Carey and Elva Jefferies.

It was decided to send for new programs for the coming year. Also that the Union have a parcel post sale and ten cent tea sometime in January, notice of which will be given later.

This was followed by readings by Mesdames Saltonstall, Arnold and Alcox. Mrs. Walker read extracts from the annual address of the president of the W. C. T. U., Mrs. Anna A. Gordon, delivered at the National convention recently held in Indianapolis.

The program, in charge of Mesdames Saunders and Weikel followed:

Recitation — "How Prohibition Works," Miss Margaret Milner.

Reading—"Why Study Parliamentary Law."

Reading by Mrs. W. J. Weikel of district president, Mrs. P. J. Howard's annual address.

Two new members were secured. Collection $1.28. Next meeting to be a pot luck supper, following the program, at the home of Mrs. A. Edwards.

What Others Eat at Christmas

EVERY one is familiar with the vianda that go to make up the Christmas dinner of the English speaking races—the turkey, goose, plum pudding and mince pie festivals—but how many of us know what they eat at Christmastide in foreign countries?

The Frenchman's Christmas bill of fare, for instance, is extensive and varied and in many respects quite different from our own. The great Gallic national dishes are truffled turkey and black puddings, of which every Frenchman who can afford such luxuries makes a very hearty meal at Yuletide.

In Russia the Christmas meal consists largely of two dishes—one of wheat porridge served with honey and the other a curious compound of stewed pears, apples, oranges, grapes and cherries, sweetened with honey and served cold.

Italians, too, are fond of rather sweet and indigestible dishes, especially at Christmas. One of their favorite combinations is that of eels, periwinkles and vermicelli, while the inevitable macaroni and spaghetti form, of course, the principal articles of food at all times.

The German Christmas dinner offers as its principal attraction the goose, without which your true German would feel that he had not had a real holiday feast. Germans, like Austrians and Italians, have a very sweet taste, as evidenced by their numerous varieties of cake.

Notwithstanding the tendency in all countries to offer huge dinners at Christmas, it would seem that every nation's holiday bill of fare is becoming simpler with the course of time. An interesting comparison may be made of the Christmas dinners formerly served in England and in this country with those of today, albeit the latter are by no means scanty.

The forbears of modern Englishmen must have possessed magnificent appetites. Their hospitality was conducted on a scale that would make the housekeeper of today shudder. The meal with which they commenced their Christmas day, a mere appetizer to them, was ample enough to rob the modern gourmet of all zest for food for several days. The sideboard of the old English mansion groaned under its leviathan round of beef, its corpulent pork pie, the Yorkshire ham, the brawn and chine, while on the table itself devilled turkeys' legs, homemade sausages, cutlets and kidneys sent up a mingled and grateful incense from an environment of piles of hot buttered toast, new laid eggs, honey and fruments.

But this repast, substantial as it was, was trifling as compared with the dinner—the real dinner—that followed not many hours after. The feast was heralded by the boar's head, preceded by servitors who blew resounding flourishes on their trumpets. The boar's head itself was carried, sometimes on a dish of gold or silver, into the banqueting hall at the head of a stately procession of guests.

Then came the peacock, which was served even more sumptuously than the boar's head, with its garnishing of rosemary and bays and its tusks ornamented with large apples. This is how they used to prepare the peacock for the feast: When it had been roasted and dressed with a stuffing of sweet herbs and spices and basted with the yolks of eggs it was sewed into its feathers, its beak was gilded, and it was borne to the dining hall by dames of high degree, accompanied by the strains of minstrelsy.

Other features of the old time Christmas dinner included geese, turkeys, capons, pheasants, sirloins of beef and haunches of venison. That these were washed down with gallons of ale and wine goes without saying. Indeed, another story might be written of the liquid element of the old English dinners.—Harper's Weekly.

Tom Speedwell's Christmas

By Rev. CHARLES FREDERIC GOSS, D. D.

THE last of the little stockings had been packed to its utmost capacity and hung upon the mantel.

Mary surveyed them with a smile of satisfaction and then went into the nursery to take her good night look at little Bob and Elsie.

When she returned there was in her great brown eyes the mysterious light of mother love.

She found her husband sitting near the fireplace and gazing absentmindedly at the flames.

"Tom," she said, "what do you think Elsie said when Bob asked her this afternoon what she wanted you to give her for Christmas?"

"I don't know. What?"

"She heaved the sweetest little sigh and replied, 'I wish papa would just give me his own self all day long.'"

"What did she mean by that?" he asked with a start.

"You dear old fellow," she answered, pushing his hair back from his forehead with her gentle hand, "you have not been yourself of late. Your business has worried you, and we hardly feel us if we see anything of you. Your body is here, but your mind is down at the store."

"You think Elsie has noticed it?"

"I do so."

"Jing! This won't do!"

"You dear old giant, I dreaded to tell you, for I know how hard it is."

"Bless your heart! Don't for heaven's sake let me fall into any habit which will darken those little children's lives nor yours," he said, kissing her.

* * * * * * *

An all day frolic began in the Speedwell home the minute those two little white nightgowned figures stole into the room at sunrise.

Tom helped them empty their stockings and open their packages, and when they screamed with delight in their childish trebles he roared in his thunderous bass. He peeled their oranges, cracked their nuts, spun their tops, strapped on their skates, dressed their dollies and shot peas at their tin soldiers for four hours until dinner.

He seemed a little tired and drawn when he carved the turkey, but Mary gave him a look that put new heart into him, and after dinner he commenced again.

You never saw any one so happy as those little Speedwell young ones! They forgot all about their toys and just rolled and tumbled over their dear old daddy like little poodles over a great Newfoundland dog.

And when the day turned to twilight and the twilight faded into dark two tired children crept up into Tom's lap and laid their heads upon his heart.

Bob fell asleep with his eyes fixed upon his father's face, in a sort of mute adoration, and Elsie, patting his bearded cheek, said in tones so much like Mary's that they startled him:

"Papa, do you know which gift I like best of all?"

"Your dolly," he said, trying to appear unconscious.

"You," she answered gravely, and, trying heroically, but vainly, to keep awake so as to feast upon his love a little longer, she, too, fell asleep and dropped off upon the sea of Nod.

And there by the fireplace sat Mary, her big brown eyes full of tears.

"Well done, dear heart," she said. "You have won a great victory today. You have given yourself to others and so have reproduced the Christ life again. And now carry them off to their cribs, and after I put them to bed you shall sit down with me and have a good, long worry if you want to."

"I don't believe I do, sweetheart. I have come out of myself for the first time in weeks, and I guess I'll stay."

The Lord of Misrule

Until quite recent times it was customary in England for the court, each parish and sometimes wealthy families to appoint a "lord of misrule" in connection with the Christmas festivities. His appointment was usually on Hallowe'en, and his rule lasted until after the new year. The lord of misrule was master of ceremonies at the revels, and it was part of his duty to provide entertainment for the court, the parish or the household. His power was absolute, and it was he who, in the guise of St. Nicholas, distributed the gifts on Christmas eve. Card playing, pantomimes, mask dancing and festivities of every kind came under his jurisdiction. He looked after the decorations. In England holly and ivy were the chief materials for the purpose, and in all households there was good natured rivalry between husbands and wives to see whether the husband should first bring the prickly holly or the wife the smooth holly across the threshold, indicating the superiority of the one or the other in the family councils for the coming year.
